Introduction

Course Description and Philosophy

Right is a six-level communicative course intended for students studying English for the first time. Right specifically targets EFL (English as a Foreign Language) students who are unfamiliar with English and don't hear it spoken outside of the classroom. The aim of the series is to develop students' speaking, reading, listening, and writing skills.
Right 4 is an A2 waystage level, according to the Council of Europe Standards.

With a strong emphasis on helping students communicate in English in their everyday lives, the syllabus progresses at a steady pace, encouraging and building confidence in students from the beginning. Each unit features a brightly illustrated, paneled conversation with words and phrases for students to learn and use in their everyday language. A reading passage in each unit about a child-relevant topic engages students' interests and develops their reading fluency and comprehension. A writing section that incorporates the unit-specific grammar point as well as one main writing skill per unit guides students into becoming better writers in any language, but specifically in the target language of English.
Students using Right 4 also have access to a useful phrase dictionary in the back of the Class Book to help them with practice of important phrases that are used often in everyday conversation. Students have a word list in each workbook to aid them as they complete their practice workbook exercises. A beautifully-illustrated story at the end of each review unit, plus a comprehension questions at the end of the story, further help to develop students' reading skills while encouraging them toward a love of reading.
Right emphasizes communication within a comprehensive, sequential syllabus that steps students through grammar development with a developmental plan. Combining vocabulary words and the grammatical structure for that unit into conversation, reading and writing activities guides students on the road to English fluency.
Each unit contains listening activities and exercises to foster correct pronunciation and intonation of the language, as well as to develop listening comprehension.
Right 4 combines active English learning with a variety of lively, theme-based units. Students relate to the themes and situations that occur throughout the book, resulting in greater language acquisition. The recurring characters in the series – Stella, John, Sarah, Helen, Harley, Hansel, Tom, Jack, Bebo the Squirrel, Lolo the Cat, and Tilly the Dog – engage and interest students throughout the series.

Right 4 incorporates techniques from proven and successful methods of teaching children English. Some of the methods used throughout the series include:

- The Functional Approach, which emphasizes the proper context in which to use certain language patterns and expressions.

- The Communicative Approach, which is based on the idea that language used in the classroom should be used to communicate thoughts and feelings that are meaningful to students.

- The Grammatical/Structural approaches, which examine grammar, focusing on patterns and structure in language to aid comprehension and retention.

- The Audio-Lingual Approach, which focuses on the sounds and syntax of the language, as well as developing audio fluency.

Each level of Right includes most if not all of the following components: Class Book, Workbook, Teacher's Book, a Teacher's Resource Pack with posters and flashcards, and a Flip Chart Book which features the scenes from the conversations in an attractive and enlarged format, an audio CD for the Class Book and Workbook and a Class Cassette.

Course Components

Class Book

The Class Book contains wonderful color illustrations combined with a simple and easy-to-follow format. Students are drawn into the book through the engaging illustrations that gain their attention and maintain their interest throughout the book. These same illustrations also function as effective conversation helpers. Right 4 includes 10 units per Class Book. Each unit contains six pages. The short units allow students to progress quickly, resulting in greater motivation and confidence for the students. After every two units, a four-page review follows to help students review and solidify concepts learned.

A scope and sequence is at the front of each Class Book, giving parents and students easy access to the overall curriculum goals. The vocabulary for each unit is also easily accessible via this scope and sequence.

Workbook

The Workbook is a natural extension of the Class Book. Students have even more opportunities to practice what they learned in the Class Book. Each unit of the Workbook contains six pages filled with a variety of exercises that engages students of various learning styles. It is flexible enough to use within or outside of the classroom. The Workbook provides teachers a further means of assessing student comprehension and 7 retention.

Teacher's Book

The comprehensive Teacher's Book provides teachers with the means to teach the Class Book in the most effective way.

The lesson plans contain activities designed to present, practice, and reinforce the new language. With step-by-step lesson plans, guidelines and tips throughout, teachers can be confident about teaching effective, organized lessons from which all students can benefit.

The Teacher's Resource Guide provides teachers with the techniques and skills needed to teach their lessons and helpful suggestions for classroom management. Open-ended activities and enrichment ideas are provided to help differentiate the curriculum to meet all learning levels and abilities.

The Class Book and Workbook Instructions and Answer Keys provide teachers access to introducing the units and checking students' work.

The Worksheets are reproducible and provide additional support for the Class Book.

The Test Instruction and Answer Key allow teachers to assess students' level of comprehension and their progress throughout the course and clearly communicate the student's progress to the parents.

The Games and Activities section helps to keep classes lively and interesting for students. Flashcards are provided for drills and games to practice each unit's vocabulary toward a mastery level.

An audio tapescript of the exercises and dialogues that appear on the Audio CD is included in the teacher's notes.
The Flip Book is an extension of the conversations found at the beginning of each unit in the Class Book. The Flip Book contains poster-size, colorful reproductions of the scenes from each conversation. Teachers find these scenes valuable visual aids to develop summarizing, conversation and descriptive language skills. Students love the bright colors and clear illustrations that draw and keep their attention.

Class Book and Workbook Audio CD

The listening exercises and activities that make up the Class Book and Workbook are included in an Audio CD format. These include the following:

a conversation
b vocabulary
c reading passages d grammar patterns
e writing passages
f review stories
g selected exercises

Students will have fun listening to native speakers of English read stories and help them through activities and exercises throughout the book. Lively and enjoyable music complement the CD to engage students to the fullest.

Teacher's Resource Pack

The Teacher's Resource Pack includes posters to hang in the teacher's classroom to offer support in teaching the units. Also included are flashcards that provide the teacher with the means to engage students in fun activities to enhance student learning.

Organization of a Unit

Right 4 Class Book consists of ten units and five review units. Each unit centers on vocabulary from a particular theme or topic. The vocabulary is then practiced in an appropriate grammatical structure. Students learn how to use the new vocabulary they have acquired in related sentences.
Each unit contains six lessons: Right Conversation, Right Vocabulary, Right Reading, Right Grammar, Right Writing, and Right Activities. Each unit builds on previously learned language and introduces new vocabulary and structures. Each lesson focuses on a specific purpose in language development. After every two units a review unit is provided to move students toward mastery of skills. A story with the Right characters is also included with each review unit to develop reading skills and comprehension.

Right* Conversation builds upon the two-sentence dialogs between Lolo and Bebo that are found in Right 1-3. Thanks to the firm foundation established in the primary Right books, students' language skills now blossom as they learn to read, paraphrase and extend longer conversations geared to their interests and language level. Each conversation is on the CD to model pronunciation and intonation.

Right* Vocabulary consists of words from the conversation that are relevant to students' expressive needs. Students listen and repeat the words to ensure correct pronunciation. A wealth of activities in the Teacher's Book, Class Book and Workbook provide ample practice to develop mastery of the words and phrases. This same vocabulary is incorporated throughout the unit and review unit to provide a rich amount of contextual use.

Right* Reading encourages reading fluency by providing students with a high-interest, level-appropriate selection to foster reading enjoyment while developing key reading skills. While listening to and reading the engaging reading passages, students will see the grammar points and vocabulary in context. The Right Reading section thus prepares students for Right Grammar and Activities by exposing students to the grammar structure being studied in the unit.

Right* Grammar introduces the grammar structure for the unit and allows students to study its form as well as practice it in sentences. The Grammar page introduces the grammar structure with an easy-to read, teacher- and student-friendly grammar chart that graphically represents the structure being taught. The remainder of the page provides substitution exercises for the student to practice and become comfortable with the grammar point for the unit.

Right* Writing builds writing skills for effective communication in both native and target languages. In addition, the writing page sequentially develops students' writing skills in yet another of the four main areas of language development. Throughout Right 4, students will progress in a systematic way from writing for short answers around a particular theme to writing poems, sentences and working towards cohesive paragraphs.

Right* Activities rreview and reinforce the vocabulary and grammar learned throughout the unit. With a variety of reading, writing, and listening activities to include many learning styles, teachers can assess how well students understand the lesson. Students can notice which of their skills need review or are ready for enrichment activities. While providing students with ample drill and practice for skill development and mastery, the activities page also provides enjoyable exercises that both challenge and motivate the students.

Motivate Your Students

Motivated students learn better and acquire language skills at a faster pace. When overall motivation is high, students behave well and participate fully in activities.

Here are some suggestions to keep your students motivated throughout the course.

- Be an enthusiastic and motivated teacher. SmBe an enthusiastic and motivated teacher. Smile and always encourage when you can. Your enthusiasm will affect your students. A positive classroom atmosphere stimulates creativity and student participation.

- Engage students with activities in which all students can participate.

- Praise good behavior, helpfulness, and language proficiency. Give students award certificates (available towards the end of this book) to acknowledge their successes. These are some words of acknowledgement that your students will appreciate:

  Good job!
  Well done!
  Good try! (if the student tried to answer but got the wrong answer)
  You've really improved.
  Try again, you can do it!
  This (that) is really great.
  Thank you.
  Thanks for helping me.
  What a great helper you are!
  I've really noticed how hard you are trying.
  Thank you for working so hard.
  Thank you for following instructions.
  You have been really patient.
  Keep up the good work.
  I'm very happy with your progress.

- Provide as many opportunities as possible for students to communicate in English. Students will gain confidence as language learners the more they are able to express themselves in English.

- Engage shy students in the class. Shy students may feel uncomfortable and lack the confidence to participate in activities. Make them feel important and successful. Encourage but don't force a child to speak in front of the class. Instead, provide positive experiences and an accepting atmosphere for the child to practice his/her English. Usually starting off slowly, like only having the student speak when working in pairs first, then later in a small group, then a large group, and finally to the whole class, is important. So is having firm but reasonable expectations. Set a goal for the student and let him/her know, "I'd like you to be practicing the conversations with your partner by _____ (date). Then in another two weeks, by _____, I'd like you to be able to be the "teacher" for a small group by _____ (date). Don't worry; I'll give you the lesson and the answers for being the teacher." Then be sure to give the student plenty of support, and guidance as s/he's working toward the goal.

Discipline is Important

A well-managed classroom can maintain motivation and keep discipline problems at a minimum.

- Students thrive when they know the boundaries. Make a set of class rules for students to follow throughout the class. Explain and discuss the rules with students on the first day of class. Display classroom rules where students can see them. Consistently maintain classroom rules and acknowledge students who follow them. Depending on the students' ages and abilities, creating the rules as a class can be especially effective, since then the students have ownership and accountability in the discipline policies.

- Explain what is expected of students. Basic classroom expectations include considerate behavior, student participation, use of the target language, and quality work.

  Inappropriate behavior from a student can originate from many possible reasons. Consider these reasons behind students' actions and address the issue. Here are some possible reasons for behavior problems:

- The lesson content is not interesting or challenging enough for the student. Students lose motivation and interest when the lessons become repetitive.

- Lesson preparation is not adequate, resulting in disruptions in the class. Come to class with well-prepared lessons so the class can proceed smoothly.

- The language level of the class is not in line with the student's abilities. Adjust lessons to accommodate the student's level or consider an alternate placement for the child.

- The teacher-student relationship is problematic. Rectify any issues with the student or his/her parents.

- Some students are attention seekers or more aggressive than others. Try to understand why the student is exhibiting this type of behavior and address it with the student and his/her parents. Communicate clear boundaries about what you will or will not allow in your classroom, but also supply the student with appropriate outlets for energetic behavior or expression of strong emotions. Establish an attitude of teamwork with the parents so they understand you are there to work with them to help their child work to his/her potential.

- External factors such as weather, family problems, unhealthy diet, lack of sleep, or after-school activities can affect a student's behavior. Be aware of these factors and address them appropriately.

- Some students may have learning disabilities or special needs and therefore face greater educational challenges. Consult their parents or a professional if necessary. Whenever possible, make small modifications in the lesson or in classroom management to accommodate a student's needs. For example, seat a hard of hearing child close to you and be sure to face toward him when speaking.

Handling Homework

Homework gives students the opportunity to reinforce and solidify the language and concepts introduced in class. It also provides parents with the opportunity to be involved in their child's learning. Here are some suggestions to motivate students to do their homework:

- Explain the expectations of students in the homework assignment. Do a few examples with the class to ensure students fully understand. Then have students write down the complete assignment.

- Encourage students to ask any questions they may have in regards to the homework.

- Make sure the homework assigned is a manageable amount for the students. Don't load students down with an abundance of homework they are unable to complete.

- Reward students who complete homework even if it is not all correct. These rewards can be stickers, gifts, or positive feedback. Making homework completion and scores an integral part of the grade also provides motivation for the students to complete homework.

- Communicate the homework schedule and quality expectations clearly to parents. If parents know the dates of important tests and assignments, they can encourage their child to schedule his/her time wisely and avoid important family commitments on the preceding dates. Encourage families to have regular homework times for their children.

Teaching to a Variety of Learning Styles in Order to Include All Learners

People learn in different ways, and so students will have various learning styles that they excel in. It is important to include teaching methods that address each learning style so all students are motivated and challenged within their particular style. Students can and should be expected to learn in a variety of styles, but they should be given plenty of opportunity to use the learning style that is most comfortable for them, especially if the student is having difficulty in learning a certain concept.

- Spatial/Visual: Use visual aids such as maps, flashcards, and realia.

- Kinesthetic: Use movement such as running or clapping with songs and games as well as manipulatives whenever possible.

- Musical: Use mnemonics in the forms of rhymes and songs. Clap the syllables of a word or sentence.
- Linguistic: Use oral drilling or activities that require speaking.

- Logical-Mathematical: Do puzzles, sequencing activities, or classification activities that involve logical deduction.

- Interpersonal: Involve students in activities or games in which they work together in pairs or groups.
- Intrapersonal: Involve students in individual activities that require personal input.

- Natural World: Show how the structure/ organization of language relates to things in nature.

Time Guidelines Help

Right emphasizes communicative competency. The majority of the class should focus on presenting and practicing the language. Books should remain closed for much of the class time so students can focus on language development without distractions. Of course, length of classes will vary depending on various factors; however, the timing of a typical class might be:

Warm Up and Review	5 minutes
Presentation and Practice	30 minutes
Games and Activities	15 minutes

Teachers must keep the class lively to maintain students' interest. This involves pacing a class appropriately. Direct instruction should be kept to short periods of between five and ten minutes. Activities should encourage student movement and engage all students, not just an individual student at a time. Young learners need to move and be active on a regular basis.

Teacher Tools

Lesson Plans

Right provides comprehensive, step-by-step lesson plans for teaching the Class Book. However, it is essential that teachers customize lesson plans to take into account the different learning styles and needs of the class. Lesson plans should have specific objectives and goals. Activities and exercises should meet the goals outlined in the lesson plan. It is also better to over-plan and have more activities as not all activities will work with all groups of students.

Lessons in the Right Teacher's Book use time effectively. Every activity, drill, or game has a purpose in advancing language proficiency. Suggested activities, explanations, and tips are provided throughout the Teacher's Book. Activities and games given within the unit lesson plan can be replaced with others such as those suggested in this introduction to suit the needs of the teacher's individual class.

Visual Aids

Visual aids like flashcards, posters, pictures, illustrations, and realia help to support students' understanding of a new language. These visual aids are valuable because they don't require translation, and they engage the students' interests. Use them to encourage the students towards more conversation and language expression.

Bulletin Boards

Bulletin boards can reflect the interests and aspirations of students while also helping students to get to know each other. These are some tips to get the most out of a bulletin board:

- Designate a space on the bulletin board as a culture corner. Display pictures of other countries and maps. Students can mark places around the world where English is spoken. Bring in pictures and realia of English culture as much as possible, and encourage students to do the same.

- Display student work and pictures. Be sure that every student has the opportunity to display her/his work.

- Use the bulletin board as a means to review material and concepts from previous lessons. Call attention to the bulletin board frequently.

- Set aside a special place on the board for photos. Photos can be of students in the class working together on a project, photos of students on trips or even students at home.

Games and Activities

Students enjoy games and fun activities. Games and activities are an essential part of any curriculum for language learners. They are natural and motivational ways to provide language use and drills for ELL students. Following some simple guidelines will contribute to successful games and activities

- Clearly understand the instructions before explaining the game or activity to students. Have students model each step of the game as the teacher explains it.

- Focus the game so that students use the target language in a meaningful and fun way. Monitor the game throughout to assess each child's level of learning and participation from the activity.

- Use tape on the floor to establish areas for various activities and clear rules for student movement to keep the games and activities organized.

Songs, rhymes and mnemonics

Word play has a vital role in students' language development. Using rhymes, songs and creative mnemonics helps students to memorize common phrases and vocabulary and also teaches the rhythm and intonations of the language. There are many different ways to incorporate word play in the classroom.

- Choose a new song every month for students to sing as they clean up after activities.

- Play English children's songs while students are working, drawing, or coloring.

- Use melodies to introduce word lists such as days of the week, colors, or common phrases

- Use a rhyme or rhythm as a mnemonic, such as "i before e, except after c, or when sounding as a as in neighbor and weigh."

Pair and Group Work

When forming groups for pair or group work, plan ahead to avoid a major disruption to the class. Consider the personalities and abilities of students. Suggestions for forming groups:

- Utilize the natural placement of students in a class. Group students that are sitting near each other.

- Form groups based on similarities like color of clothing or birthdays.

- Establish a rotation system where each group has a color or vocabulary word, and the groups rotate through a certain pattern each day. Be sure to vary the groups regularly so students learn to work with different people and abilities.

Team Teaching

Two teachers can bring activities, conversations, and dialogues to life by acting as models for students in front of the class. They can also provide more individualized attention to students. While volunteers should never be used to replace teachers, effective use of parent volunteers to monitor conversation groups, provide individualized instruction, or simply to help with group rotation can be an excellent way to enhance instruction.

Modeling

Modeling an activity helps students to understand an activity. It saves time later and helps students to take away the most from an activity. Most importantly, modeling enables you to explain a structure or an activity to students using only English. Asking students to model can be an effective way to keep students' interest.

Teaching Components

Vocabulary

Utilize the flashcards and posters that are available in Right Teacher's Resource Pack to enhance and support students in learning new vocabulary. Flashcard sets can be reproduced for classroom games, using one flashcard set per group or per student. Also helpful is providing students with actual objects that represent the vocabulary word. Hold up the object or flashcard and say the word. Give students the opportunity to utilize the poster by being "teacher," or by pointing and naming an item from the poster as they go in or out of the classroom, or by making a "student statue" of the scene for other students to guess and describe.

The Teacher's Book provides a number of drills and activities designed to develop and reinforce the students' vocabulary knowledge.

Pronunciation

Check students for correct pronunciation of the words. It is best, however, not to single out individual students and ask them to repeat a word or phrase in front of the class. Instead, have the entire class practice the problematic word or pattern several times. Walk around the class, listening to the pronunciation of students. Later, when the students are in pairs or groups, spend time with individual students who are still having trouble.

It's important to keep in mind that even native English-speaking children have difficulty in learning certain English sounds. Among the sounds that are problematic are r, l, sh, and th. Therefore, it is important to remain patient with students until they achieve the correct pronunciation.

While correct pronunciation is important, teachers should be aware not to place undue stress upon pronunciation as this can cause frustration in students. Students may become afraid of speaking the new language as they will fear making mistakes. The teacher should keep a careful balance between correcting mispronunciation and creating a lack of confidence in students.

Utilize the audio tracks for each lesson to provide students with correct pronunciation of words and patterns from native English speakers.

Contractions

Right teaches both contracted and non-contracted language, but stresses the use of contractions in order to help students to speak naturally. Students become comfortable and familiar with contractions so they sound more fluent and better understand natural English. Familiarity with contractions also gives students an advantage when they begin to read and write.

Reading

Students should be encouraged to read by looking for the same words or sentences on the page and by pointing to each word as they listen to the audio. In this way, they will get familiar with the words in the lesson and will be able to read what is in the Workbook.

Writing

Students practice letter recognition in a variety of exercises. They also practice printing the letters in tracing exercises that gradually guide them to print entire words and sentences on their own. It's recommended to go over workbook exercises in class that are assigned as homework to enable students to complete the exercises with understanding and confidence.

Teaching Tips

Practical Teaching

These are some practical teaching tips that are of benefit to a teacher in class.

- Establish a signal that students recognize as a sign to pay attention. For example, clap your hands twice, flicker the lights, or ring a bell. Remember, it is usually best to counter a noisy classroom with quiet, not with more noise. Flicking the lights or talking in a whisper will often quiet students more than talking loudly in an already loud classroom.

- Prepare students when about to change an activity. This allows students to complete what they are doing and mentally shift to another activity.

- Create a sense of security in students by establishing a routine that's followed consistently in the class.

- Get feedback from students about the class. Acknowledge their feedback and, if appropriate, make changes to meet their needs.

English as the Language of Instruction

Right targets EFL students who may not hear English spoken outside of the classroom. However, language input is an essential aspect of learning a new language. Thus, it is of utmost importance to conduct classes in English as much as possible. The tips provided below help to maximize English usage in the classroom.

- All instructions should be given in English. Use gestures, body language and visual aids to help students to understand.
- Review previously learned language regularly so that it becomes a part of students' English vocabulary.

- Find occasions for students to experience English in a communicative, meaningful, and interesting way. For example, invite a native English speaker to class to talk to students about a particular topic. Arrange for a pen pal e-mail exchange with a class from an English-speaking country. Have students listen to a relevant radio show or TV program in English, perhaps as an incentive reward, etc.

Assessment

The teacher should keep track of students through tests, notes, and observation. This ensures that the teacher understands the skills and problem areas of each student. The teacher can also determine which students require further explanation and practice in a particular area or concept. Informal assessments can be done daily, but be sure to schedule time for formal assessments regularly as well.

Correcting Students

Large classes present special challenges for monitoring student participation and learning. Here are some tips to effectively teach large classes.

- Walk around the classroom and Correcting mistakes is an important role of any teacher. However, as previously mentioned, teachers should find the right balance when correcting students. Pay attention to students' reactions to correction. Some students won't lose motivation or confidence while others will become self-conscious and reticent.

Methods of correction during accuracy- based activities:

- Point out the error, say the correct form, and have the student repeat the correct form.
- Don't point out the error but simply model the correct form by repeating back what the student said but with the correct structure.
- Repeat the student's sentence, stressing the error with rising intonation. Then immediately repeat the sentence, pausing before the error, and have the student give the correct form.

Methods of correction during fluency based activities:

- Rephrase students' mistakes in correct English. It isn't necessary to interrupt students or have them repeat the corrected sentence.
- Sometimes refrain from correcting students during games or particular activities. This enhances motivation and lends a sense of fun and excitement to the class. During group work, monitor students for common mistakes. Once the activity is finished, correct the mistakes with the class as a whole.
- Establish an atmosphere of acceptance and support, not of negativity or derision. For example, if a student makes a mistake or doesn't know the answer during a whole-class activity, instead of asking another student to correct Johnny, ask Johnny if he'd like to call on another student to work with him to say the answer. This keeps Johnny in control (he can call on another student he feels safe with), and gives students the idea that they're supposed to be helping and encouraging each other.

Teaching Large Classes

Large classes present special challenges for monitoring student participation and learning. Here are some tips to effectively teach large classes.

- Walk around the classroom and listen as students work in pairs and groups. Note the common areas of difficulty and address them with the whole class at the end.
- When playing a game that requires a lot of movement around the class, divide the class into two or more groups. One group plays the game while the other does a quiet activity at their desks. Then the groups change roles. Establishing centers where students rotate from activity to activity at a given time can be another effective way to maximize the student-teacher ratio.
- Make sure the entire class can see the teaching materials clearly, especially for the students at the back of the class. Use large visual aids or walk around the classroom with the teaching material to enable all students to see and participate.

Introducing Culture

As students become comfortable and familiar with English as a foreign language, encourage and inspire interest in students for other foreign cultures. Introduce flags from different countries. Discuss the daily life of people from other countries. Have students listen to music and look at folk art. Each country has its own set of greetings, money, dances, clothing, and games. Bring these into class to show to students. Embassies and consulates are often more than willing to provide free information about their countries.

Involving Parents in Their Child's Education

Students, whose parents are actively involved in their child's education, generally perform better academically than other students. Students exhibit a higher level of motivation when parents show an interest in their education. Inform parents of what their children are learning and the progress they're making in the class. Through parents, teachers can also discover aspects of a student's language development that is not evident in class. They can also provide information on students' special needs or problems.

Drills, Games and Activities

Drills

1 Repetition Drill

Model vocabulary words or new language patterns for the class to repeat.
Teacher: a dog, a dog. Students: a dog. Teacher: a rabbit, a rabbit. Students: a rabbit.

Alternatively:

2 Substitution Drill

To do a substitution drill, use flash cards or actual objects as cues.

Ss: They're under the table.

Alternatively:

T: (show a picture of a bird) There's a bird. I like birds.

3 Chain Drill

In a chain drill, you should use objects or flash cards as cues. Show an object or flash card to the first student and ask a related question. The student answers and turns to the next student to ask the same question with appropriate substitutions. Continue until all the students have had a chance to ask and answer the question. Divide larger classes into three or four small groups, and have each group do a chain drill.

T: (show a picture of a robot to SI) What's this?

S2: It's a jump rope.

4 Six-Second Drill

To make drills fun and exciting, after modeling several times, have students say the vocabulary or sentence in a quick series of three and raise their hands and say, "Finished!" Repeat several times for each word. Doing these drills several times in a series of three, you will be able to have the students say the target language many times even in one minute. They will be talking at natural speed (to be the first student to say Finished!), and drills become more like games.

Ss: Pencil, pencil, pencil! Finished!

T: Again! (Can you say it better this time? Say Finished! and clap two times.)

Ss: Pencil, pencil, pencil! Finished!

T: Again! (add a task)

Sentence pattern drill: I like cats.

Ss: I like cats, I like cats, I like cats. Finished!

T: Again! (Can you say it faster this time? Say Finished! and stand up.)

Ss: I like cats, I like cats, I like cats. Finished!

T: Again! (add a task)
Question form: What do you like?

T: Again! (Can you say it louder this time? Say Finished! and tap your head!)

T: Again! (add a task)

Games and Activities for Vocabulary

5 Duck, Duck, Goose

On the board, write two lists of words that can be divided into two categories such as "items in the house" and "items in the classroom." Have students read each of the words. Then the students sit in a circle, and one student walks around the outside of the circle, saying a word from either List A or List B. If the word is from List A, the seated student stays seated. If, however, the volunteer taps a student's head and says a word from List B, that student (S1) quickly stands up and tries to tap the volunteer on the shoulder before the volunteer has run all the way around the circle and sat down in the S1's spot. If the volunteer is tapped on the shoulder, he/she remains the volunteer. If he/she sits down before being tapped on the shoulder, S1 becomes the new volunteer. Continue in the same way for five to seven minutes. Part way through the game, switch the lists so a word from list A is the signal to make the student run.

6 Find Your Partner: Rhymes

Play this game when many of the list words are shorter words and can be easily rhymed. Use photocopied sets of flashcards for the current unit. Hand out flashcards, one to each student, being sure that each word has a match somewhere else in the room. Students read their word, then begin moving around the room, saying a word that rhymes with their word. As soon as they find another student who is saying a word that rhymes with his word, the two students show their cards. If they're matching, students sit down together and come up with an example sentence for their word. After all the students have found their 22 match, give students time to share the sentences they have made.

7 Running dictation

To practice vocabulary phrases, write several dialogs between S1 (student one) and S2 (student two). Each of the S2 responses should have a vocabulary phrase. Put all of S1's beginning sentences on one sheet of paper, and put each of S2's answers on an index card (or index-card-size sheet of paper). Cover the writing on the card with a piece of paper with a number on it that corresponds to the number of the dialog. Post the cards in various places around the room.
Have students work in pairs. Hand out a sheet of paper with all of S1's parts to each pair of students. Have the pairs choose which student will be the runner and which one the writer. Students read each of the S1 sentences. After the teacher says, "Go," the runner gets up, runs to one of the cards, uncovers it and reads the response. S/he must then communicate well enough with the partner that the partner can write the whole response part down on the sheet of paper to complete the dialog. Usually this involves hurrying back and forth from the card to the desk(s). After all the dialogs are finished, the pair raises their hands. The winner is whoever finishes first and correctly. Check students' answers at the end.

8 Hold Up the Card

Give each student a flash card. Say either the vocabulary word or a clue about the word. The students with the corresponding card hold it up and repeat the word. For added challenge, say two or more words at a time, say the word incorrectly, or gradually say the words at a faster pace.

9 Make a sentence

Show the backs of the flashcards for a unit or a review unit fanned in your hand like a handful of playing cards. Offer the cards to one student and ask him/her to choose three cards. The student reads the three cards, then makes a sentence using the three words. If the student cannot think of a sentence, s/he can choose another student to help make a sentence. Play until many students have had a turn and all the words have been practiced.

10 Telephone

Divide the class into groups of five to six. Each group stands in a line. Give the first student in each line (S1) a flash card. Students whisper the word down each line until it reaches the last student. That student says the word, and S1 holds up the flashcard. The group checks to see if the word is correct or has changed. The last student in each line then goes to the front of the line. Continue in the same way until all students have had a turn being at the front of the line. The line with the most points at the end wins.

11 What's in the Air?

Face the board and write a word in the air with your finger. See if students can guess the word. Show the students how to relax their hand between letters so students watching can tell where one letter ends and the other begins, then let students come up and spell vocabulary words as well. A variation would be to let the student who spells the word also uses it in a sentence after the word has been guessed.

12 Around the World

Students sit in a circle. Two volunteers stand up next to each other to begin the game. Show these two students a flash card. The first student of the pair to correctly name the card wins a point. The "loser" sits back down, and the "winner" moves to stand beside the student on his/her left. This student then stands up. Show the new pair a different flash card. The first student of this pair to correctly name the card wins a point, then moves to stand beside the next student. Play continues in this way around the circle. If any student can go around the entire circle without having to sit down, he/she has gone "Around the World," and gets an extra five points.

Continue for five to seven minutes. The student with the most points at the end wins.

LARGE CLASSES: Instead of moving around a circle, students move along the rows of desks.

13 Baketball

Preparation: Make two basketballs by cutting out two circles from orange pieces of paper. On each side of the board, draw a column of six horizontal lines. On the top line, draw a basketball hoop. Attach the two basketballs to the board below the bottom line.
Play: Divide the class into two teams and have a student from each team come to the front of the classroom. Show these two students a flash card. The first student to correctly name the card moves his/her team's basketball up to the first line. These two students return to their seats and another student from each team comes to the board to name a card. Continue play in the same way. The first team to move their basketball to the hoop wins two points. Return the basketball to the starting position and continue play until a pre-determined number of points is reached. The team who reaches this number first wins.

VARIATIONS:

1 Count an incorrect guess as a foul, which results in the loss of one point.

2 Students shoot baskets instead of using the lines on the board. Place a wastebasket at the front of the classroom. After correctly identifying a card, students shoot a ball into the wastebasket. If they make a basket, the team gets a point.

14 Bingo!

Prepare 3 X 3, 4 X 4, or 5 x 5 large grids. Give each student one grid and 9, 16, or 25 flash cards face up. Students place a flash card in each square of the grid. One by one, call out the items illustrated on the flash cards. When a named item is on a student's grid, he/she places a marker on the card. If a student-marks three (or four or five) items in a row (horizontal, vertical, or diagonal), he/she calls out Bingo! then names the cards making up the row, and wins a point. Students then reposition the cards on their grids and play again.

VARIATIONS:

1 Give students blank grids. On the board, write a list of words to be practiced. Students choose words from this list and write the word or draw a picture of the item in each grid square.

2 Before beginning play, students take turns naming the cards or pictures on their grids.

3 If beginning students need more support, hold up the flash cards while calling out the items.

4 Instead of calling out the names of items/ give only hints about the items. For example: It's red. It's round. The first student to say the correct word puts his/her marker on that picture.

5 Students try to cover squares to form the shape of a pre-determined letter. For example: T, F, E, I, L, H. When a student covers squares in the shape of the pre-determined letter, he/ she shouts Bingo!

6 Students try to cover every square on their grid. When a student does this, he/she shouts Blackout!

15 Concentration: Picture to Picture

Shuffle five to ten pairs of matching picture flash cards and place them face down on a desk. Students take turns turning over two cards and naming them. If a student cannot name the cards, he/she turns the cards face down again and the next student takes a turn. If a student names the cards correctly but they do not match, the cards must also be turned face down, and play moves to the next student. If the student does correctly name the cards and they do match, that student keeps the pair and takes another turn. The student who has the most pairs once all cards are taken wins the game.

16 Concentration: Picture to Word

Prepare five to ten pairs of picture flash cards and corresponding word cards. Students play Concentration as in the above game, matching the flash card to the corresponding word card.

17 Concentration: Pairs

When playing either of the above Concentration games, have students 25 play in pairs in order to make the game more cooperative.

18 Do It!

Give each student a flash card. Name one of the cards twice then give a command. For example: apple, apple, stand up! Students with that card name the card then do the action. For added challenge, name two or three cards with the same command so that more students are doing the actions. For example: apple, apple, boy, boy, stand up! Students then take on the teacher's role. Continue in the same way for four to five minutes.

19 Do You Remember?

Students open their Class Books to the first two pages of the unit, which they have studied, and look at the large scene for one minute. When the time is up, students close their books and name as many items as they can.

20 Draw the Picture

Divide the class into two teams. Place the target flash cards into a hat, large envelope, or small bag. Bring a volunteer from each team to the front of the classroom and ask them each to choose a card from the hat. The volunteers then draw a picture of their word on the board and their teams try to be the first to identify the picture. The first team to correctly identify the picture wins a point. The volunteers return to their seats and a new volunteer from each team comes to the board. Continue play until all words have been chosen from the hat. The team with the most points at the end wins.

VARIATIONS:

1 Both volunteers draw the same word.

2 Limit the drawing time to one minute. For extra challenge, shorten the amount of time even more.

3 Bring a volunteer from one team to the front of the classroom. Ask her/him to choose a word from the hat, then draw that word. The rest of the team guesses what is being drawn. Time how long it takes them to answer correctly. Record the time, then have a student from the other team take a turn in the same way. Continue until all words have been chosen from the hat. At the end of the game, add up each team's times. The team with the shortest time wins.

21 Eyewitness

Divide the class into groups of three to four. Give each group a piece of paper. Place a set of ten flash cards face down on a desk at the front of the classroom, and have a volunteer from each group come to the desk. Turn the cards face up. The volunteers look at the cards, run back to their groups, and name as many of the cards as they can. Groups then try to be the first to make a list of those items by writing the name or drawing a picture of each one, then raising their hands. Groups take turns saying the words. Both the 26 group that finishes first and the group that has the most correct win a point. Place a different set of ten cards on the desk at the front of the classroom, bring up different volunteers, and do the activity again in the same way.

22 Find Your Partner: Competitive

Give each student a flash card, making sure to distribute at least two of each card. Students walk around the classroom naming their card, and try to find another student with the same card. When students find a student with the same card, the two come to the teacher, name their card, and write the word on the board. If they do this correctly, they win a point. If they do not do this correctly, they correct the mistake and do not win a point. Once most students have come to the teacher, have students exchange cards and do the activity again. Continue in the same way for five to seven minutes. The student at the end with the most points wins.

23 Four Corners

In each comer of the classroom place a sign with a picture representing a unit category. For example: animals, school supplies, nature, fruit. Say a vocabulary word that corresponds to one of the categories. For example: pen. Students repeat the word and run to the corner of the room with that category's sign. If students are standing in the wrong corner, they sit down. Continue in the same way until there is just one student left standing.

LARGE CLASSES: Students point to the correct sign instead of running to it.

24 Guess the Card

Divide the class into groups of four to five. Give each group 10-15 flash cards. Each group places their cards face down in a row in front of them. One student in each group touches one of the cards and tries to guess what it is, saying This is a (tree), then turns the card over. If the guess is correct, the card is left face up. If the guess is not correct, the student names the card then turns it back over. Students in each group take turns trying to identify the cards until all cards have been turned over.

25 Guess the Order

Divide the class into groups of three to four. Show students five flash cards, then shuffle the cards and stand them on the chalk tray with the pictures facing the board. Write a number from 1-5 above each card (do not use the same number twice). Groups guess which card is below each number by writing numbers 1-5 on a piece of paper, then writing the name of a card next to each number. A volunteer from each group then writes the group's guesses on the board. Turn the cards to face the class, point to each card, and elicit its name. Groups then check how many cards they correctly identified. The group that correctly identified the most cards wins a point. Any group that correctly identified all the cards wins a bonus point. Continue in the same way for five to seven minutes. The group with the most points at the end wins.

VARIATION: Give each group a set of flash cards. Two groups (Group A and Group B) then join together and stand facing each other. Group A shows Group B their cards, shuffles them, and then places them face down between the two groups. Volunteers in Group B point to each card and try to name it. Group A turn the cards face up. Group B wins a point for each correctly named card. The two groups then change roles and Group A takes a turn trying to name Group B's cards.

26 Guess What's Missing

Place six flash cards on the chalk tray. Students study the cards for 10-15 seconds, then close their eyes. Remove one of the cards. Students open their eyes and try to be the first to raise their hands and identify the missing card. When a student correctly identifies the missing card, he/she wins a point. Play until all cards have been removed from the chalk tray. Then play again, having volunteers take on the teacher's role of removing cards from the chalk tray. The student with the most points at the end wins.

VARATIONS:

1 For extra challenge, remove more than one card each time.

2 Divide the class into two teams. Play as above, with students in each team cooperating to identify the missing card. The first team to correctly identify the missing card wins a point.

27 Hold It Up!

Give each student a flash card. Name one of the items illustrated on the cards. Students with that card repeat and hold it up. For added challenge, name two or three items at a time, name items for which students do not have cards, or gradually name the items at a faster pace. Continue in the same way for three to four minutes.

28 Hunt for the Words

Hide seven of each flash card around the classroom. Divide the class into groups of three to four. Give each group a set of each of the flash cards hidden around the classroom. Tell all groups how many more of each card they need to find. For example: two flowers, one tree, three birds. Say Start! Groups try to be the first to find the required number of cards, then run to the teacher and name those cards. The first group to collect and correctly name all their cards wins.

VARIATION: Two groups play against each other, hiding cards for the opposing group to find. For this activity, the cards for each group need to be a different color.

29 Listen to the Clues

Hold up a flash card with the back of the card facing the class. Give simple clues about the picture and have students try to identify it. For example (banana card): It's yellow. Monkeys like this. Do the same with five to seven different cards.

30 Old Maid

Divide the class into groups of four to six. Give each group a set of cards made up of two identical sets of ten flash cards each, plus one card without a match. This card without a match is the Old Maid card. A volunteer in each group then distributes the cards evenly among the members of his/her group. Students look at the cards they have, place any matching pairs on the desk in front of them, and name them. If they are not able to name them, they must keep the cards until the next turn. Students in each group then take turns taking one card from the student sitting on their left. If the new card matches one they have, they name it and put the pair down on the desk. If the card does not match, they keep the card and the next student takes a turn. Students continue in the same way until one student has put down all his/her cards. The student in each group with the most matching pairs at the end wins. The student with the odd card at the end is Old Maid and cannot win the game even if he/she has the most matching pairs.

31 Pair Them Up

Prepare two identical sets of flash cards with enough cards for each student to get one card from each set. Distribute the cards from one of the sets among students, giving each student a card. Place the remaining set of cards face down on a desk in the middle of the classroom. Divide the Class into groups of four to six. A volunteer from one of the groups Sl goes to the cards, points to one, guesses what it is, then turns the card over. If Sl is correct, he/she takes the card and checks to see if it matches a card his/her group has. If it does match, Sl keeps the pair. If it does not match, Sl returns the card to the desk, and a volunteer from another group takes a turn. If Sl does not guess correctly, or cannot correctly name the card, he/ she turns the card back over and a volunteer from another group takes a turn. Continue in the same way until one group has placed all of its cards down as pairs. This group wins the game. LARGE CLASSES: Divide the class into groups of four to six. Each group then plays as above. The student in each group with the most pairs at the end wins.

32 Pantomime and Guess the Word

Pantomime an action related to a vocabulary word and have students try to identify the word. For example: (banana) pantomime peeling a banana and eating it. Continue pantomiming until a student correctly identifies the 29 item. Then bring two to three students to the front of the classroom to take on the teacher's role. Alternatively, students work in groups, with students in each group taking turns pantomiming. Continue in the same way for five to seven minutes.

33 Race Track

Divide the class into groups of five to six. Give each group two sets of flash cards and a die. Groups place their flash cards face up in a circle. Designate a starting point on each group's circle and tell students how many times they must go around the circle in order to finish. Each student then places a marker on the designated starting point. Students in each group then take turns rolling the die and moving their markers around the circle, one card per number on the die. When students land on a card, they name it. If they correctly name it, they remain on that card. If they fail to name it, they return their marker to where it was at the start of that turn. The first student in each group to complete the required number of rounds wins. For extra challenge, when a student lands on a card and correctly names it, he/she turns it face down so that the next student to land on that card must name it from memory.

34 Run and Find

Attach a set of flash cards to the walls around the classroom. Divide the class into Teams A and B. Bring a volunteer from each team to the front of the classroom. Name one of the flash cards. These two volunteers try to be the first to repeat the word, then run to and touch the named card. The student to first touch the correct card wins a point for his/her team. Another student from each team then comes to the front of the classroom. Play continues in the same way until all cards have been named. Students can also come to the front of the classroom and take on the teacher's role, calling out words. The team with the most points at the end wins.

LARGE CLASSES: Divide the class into groups of three to four and give each group a set of flash cards. Groups then place their cards face up in the middle of the group. Say one of the words. Students in each group try to be the first to repeat the word, then find and hold up the named card. If the correct card is held up, the student keeps it. If a student holds up an incorrect card, he/she returns the card to the desk. Play continues until one group has picked up all their cards. The student in each group with the most cards at the end wins.

VARIATION: Assign a number to each student, making sure that for each number on Team A, there is the same number on Team B. Name one of the flash cards. Then say a number. The student from each team with that number tries to be the first to run and touch the named card.

35 Slow Reveal

Hold up a flash card with another card or piece of paper covering it so that only a small portion of the picture is showing. Students try to name the picture. Each time a student incorrectly names the picture, slide the covering card down to gradually reveal more of the picture. Continue sliding the cover down until a student is able to name the picture. Continue in the same way with five to seven different cards.

36 Snap

Place a set of flash cards and a set of the corresponding word cards in two piles face down on a desk in the middle of the classroom. Simultaneously turn over one card from each pile. Students look at the two cards, decide if they match or not, then snap their fingers if they do match. The first student to snap his/her fingers to correctly identify a match then names each card and wins a point. If the cards do not match or if students do not correctly identify the match, continue play with two new cards. Play until all cards have been turned over. The student with the most points at the end wins.

LARGE CLASSES: Divide the class into groups of six to eight and have each group playas above.

VARIATION: Play with two sets of word cards. For extra challenge, use words with similar spellings.

37 Tic-Tac-Toe: Words

Divide the class into pairs. Two pairs play against each other. Give each set of pairs nine flash cards. Pairs place the flash cards face up to make a 3 x 3 grid between them. Pairs take turns naming a card in the grid. If the pair is correct, they place their marker on that square of the grid. The first pair to place three markers in a row (horizontal, vertical, or diagonal) wins the game.

38 Touch the Card

Place 10-15 flash cards on a desk in the middle of the classroom. Students gather around that desk. Name a card. Students try to be the first to touch the named card. The first student to touch the correct card and name it keeps the card. Continue in the same way until no cards are left on the desk. The student with the most cards at the end wins. Play again, having a volunteer take on the teacher's role and name the cards.

LARGE CLASSES: Divide the class into groups of four to five. Each group plays as above.

VARIATION: Instead of naming a card, hold up a word card. Students read the word silently and try to be the first to touch and name the corresponding flash card.

39 Verb Relay

Divide the class into Teams A and B, then have each team stand in a line. Give a set of verb flash cards to the first student (S1) in each line. Sl turns to face his/her team, looks at the first 31 card and pantomimes the action for the second student in his/her line (S2). S2 identifies the action being pantomimed. Then Sl turns over the next card in his/her pile and pantomimes that action for S3 and so on to the end of the line. The first team to finish wins a point. S1 then goes to the back of the line, the student now at the front of the line becomes the new S1, and play continues in the same way. The first team to get five points wins.

40 What's in the Bag?

Place realia of vocabulary items in a bag. A volunteer feels the bag, tries to identify an item without looking at it, then removes it from the bag. If the student identifies the item correctly, he/she keeps it and another volunteer takes a turn. If he/she does not identify the item correctly, the item is put back in the bag and another volunteer takes a turn. Continue in the same way until no items are left in the bag.

41 Where Is It in the Book?

Name an item, a character, or an action from a Class Book unit. Students try to be the first to find the page on which the item, character, or action appears, point to it, then name it. The first student to do so wins a point. Continue in the same way until students have looked at least one third of the pages they have studied. The student at the end with the most points wins.

Note: As a character or item may appear on more than one page, including pages not yet studied, accept any answer that is correct.

VARIATION: Students find a character in the Class Book and mimic that character's actions or gestures. The rest of the class tries to find that character in their Class Books, and name the character, an item that character has, or what that character is doing.

42 Which Card Doesn't Belong?

Divide the class into two teams. A volunteer from each team comes to the front of the classroom. Give each of these volunteers identical sets of four flash cards, three cards from the same unit or category and one card from a different unit or category. For example: goat, cat, horse, pencil. Say Go! The volunteers look at their cards, place the card that doesn't belong on the chalk tray, and name it. The first volunteer to place the correct card on the chalk tray and name it wins a point for his/her team. The team wins another point for each card the members of the team can correctly name. Continue in the same way until every student has had a turn. The team with the most points at the end wins.

Games and Activities for Conversation

43 Back to Back

If possible, use toy telephones or old phones. Pair off students and give each student a phone. Have partners sit back-to-back and pretend they are talking on the phone. When facing away from each other, and since the rest of the class will be speaking, students must speak very clearly and concentrate on what their partners are saying. Have partners practice their dialogue twice, so that each student can practice both parts. Circulate and help as necessary.

44 Beanbag Circle

Have the class form a circle. Toss a ball or a beanbag to Sl and ask a question. Sl responds, tosses the ball to another student (S2), and asks a question. Continue until all students have had a chance to participate. For large classes, play Beanbag Circle in groups so that more students can participate simultaneously.

45 Conversation Lines

Have the students stand in parallel lines facing each other, so that each student has a partner in the opposite line. Partners practice the question-and-answer pattern.

S1: What's your name?

S2: My name is (Sam). What's your name?

S1: My name is (John).

Then have the two lines move one space (left or Right) in opposite directions. Have the student with no partner at the end of the line come to the front of the line, so that every student has a new partner. Repeat the dialogue. Listen to the pairs at the front of the lines and help them as necessary.

46 Dialogue Musical Chairs

Place chairs back-to-back in two rows or at random around the room. Have one chair less than the number of students in the class. Play the recording of a song or instrumental music. As the music plays, students move around the room to greet each other and practice dialogue. When the music stops, the students sit down. The student without a chair to sit on is out of the game. Continue the game until there is one student left. For variety, remove two chairs at a time instead of one. The two students who remain standing must say a dialogue together or ask each other questions.

47 Step Away Lines

This activity encourages children to speak loudly. Have students stand in two rows facing each other, so that each student has a partner in the opposite line. Have each pair say a dialogue. Each time a pair completes the dialogue. Both partners take a giant step back and repeat the dialogue again. Every time they do so, they will naturally need to speak louder in order to be heard by each other.

48 Listen and Act

Two pairs of volunteers (PI and P2) come to the front of the classroom. PI says the conversation, using the Class Book for reference if necessary, and P2 acts it out. PI and P2 then change roles and do the activity again. Another two pairs of volunteers then come to the front of the classroom and do the activity. Continue until most students have taken a turn.

49 Puppets

Each student makes a puppet (see puppet-making ideas below). Divide the class into pairs and have pairs role play the conversation using their puppets as the speakers. Make sure students give puppets appropriate gestures and facial expressions. Students in each pair then change roles and role-play the conversation again.

PUPPET-MAKING IDEAS:

1 Students draw pictures of the characters, people, or animals on a paper or cardboard. They then cut out the pictures and glue them onto popsicle sticks or pencils.

2 Students use markers to draw a face on a sock, and glue wool on the sock for hair. Students put their hands in the sock with their thumb in the heel and fingers in the toe. They then bring the tips of their thumbs and fingers together to manipulate the puppet's mouth.

50 Three to a Conversation

Bring three students (S1, S2, and S3) to the front of the classroom. Give S1 a Class Book for reference. S2 and S3 say the conversation. S1 checks for mistakes and corrects if necessary. S2 then holds the Class Book and S1 and S3 say the conversation. They then sit down. Divide the class into groups of three, and have each group do the activity as above. Students in each group then change roles and repeat the procedure. Continue until all students have taken on each role.

51 Tic-Tac-Toe Conversation

Prepare 3 x 3 grids with one line of the conversation written in each square. Divide the class into pairs. Two pairs (PI and P2) play together. Give each group of pairs one of the 3 x 3 grids. PI, in unison, says one of the conversation lines, then says the next line of that conversation. If they correctly say the lines of the conversation, they place their marker on that square of the grid. Then P2 takes a turn. The first pair to place three markers in a row (horizontal, vertical, or diagonal) wins the game.

52 Toss the Ball

Toss a ball to a student and say the first line of the conversation. That student responds with the second line of the conversation, and then tosses the ball to another student who says the third line of the conversation, and so on around the class. Students continue until everyone has said a line of the conversation.

53 Which Line Doesn't Belong?

Write each line of four to five different conversations on a piece of paper, and then copy it. Cut up both sheets to make two identical sets of strips of paper, each with one line of a conversation on it. Divide the class into Teams A and B. A volunteer from each team comes to the front of the classroom. Give each volunteer a set of identical strips of paper which includes a complete conversation plus one strip from a different conversation. For example: Ah-choo! Bless you! Thanks! What's your first name? Say Go! The volunteers look at their pieces of paper and place the line of conversation that doesn't belong on the chalk tray. The first volunteer to place the correct piece of paper on the chalk tray wins a point for his/her team. The team wins another point for each line of the conversation the members of the team can correctly say. Continue until each student has had a turn. The team with the most points at the end wins.

54 Who Was That?

Bring a student (S1) to the front of the classroom and have him/her face the board. Ask another student (S2) to say the first line of the conversation. S1 tries to identify S2 and say the second line of the conversation. If S1 identifies S2, they finish the conversation together. If S1 does not identify S2, he/she tries again. If S1 still cannot identify S2, he/she turns around to face the class, and S1 and S2 say the conversation from the beginning. Encourage S2 to change his/her voice to make the activity more challenging. Choose another pair of volunteers, and continue the activity in the same way until most students have had a turn.

55 I Spy

Make sure there are many items in the classroom which students can name in English. If not, place flash cards of familiar items around the classroom. Say, for example, I spy something that ____ and give a clue about the word. Students look around the classroom and try to name an item that matches the clue. If they are correct, say Yes and give that student(s) a point. If the guess is not correct, reply No and have students continue guessing until someone guesses correctly. Give clues to help, if students are having trouble guessing, for example: It's small, it's red. Continue in the same way for five to seven minutes.

Games and Activities for Grammar

56 Complete the Sentences

Make a list of incomplete sentences, such as I like __ , I can __ , I'm __ . Say one of them. A volunteer repeats, filling in the blank with an appropriate word. If the volunteer completes the sentence correctly, he/she wins a point. If he/she does not complete the sentence correctly, any other student can complete the sentence and win a point. Say another 35 incomplete sentence and have another volunteer take a turn. Continue until most students have had a turn. The student with the most points at the end wins.

VARIATION: Do the activity in groups, with students from each group taking turns coming to the front of the classroom, choosing a strip of paper with the incomplete sentence written on it, and returning to his/her group to read the sentence. The rest of the group completes the sentence.

57 Guess Who

Divide the class into groups of four to six. Place six flash cards face down on a desk at the front of the classroom. One of the groups comes to the front of the classroom and each member takes one of the cards. Students in the other groups take turns asking questions using the target pattern in order to determine each student's card. For example: (Pat), do you like apples? If the student has the apples card, he/she answers Yes, I do, and gives the card to the group that asked the question. That group then takes another turn. If the student does not have the apples card, he/she replies No, I don't, and another group takes a turn. Groups continue in the same way until the group at the front of the classroom has no cards left. Another group then comes to the front of the classroom.

58 Memory Chain

A student (S1) makes a statement using the target pattern. For example: I like apples. The student sitting next to or behind him/her (S2) says S1's name, repeats the statement, then adds his/her own statement. For example: Jim, you like apples. I like bananas. The student sitting next to or behind S2 (S3) then repeats S1and S2's statements, and adds his/her own. Students continue in the same way until someone is unable to repeat all the previous statements.

59 Pass the Message

Students work seated in rows. The first student in each row (S1) thinks of a statement using the target pattern and whispers it to the second student in the row (S2). S2 whispers the statement to the third student in the row (S3). S3 then whispers the statement to S4, and so on down the row. When the statement reaches the last student in the row, he/she says it aloud. If it matches S1's original statement, the row wins a point. If it does not match S1's original statement, the row does not win a point. Students in each row then move forward one seat and do the activity again.

VARIATION: Play as above, but have the last student ask a question using the question form of the statement. For example: S1: I like pizza. Last student: (S1's name), do you like pizza?

60 True or False

Using grammar sentence patterns, prepare 10-20 statements, some true and some false (try to make the false statements as humorous as possible'). For example: I'm Mr. Smith. I'm an astronaut. I have ten brothers and nine sisters. Say one of the statements. Students who think the statement is true go to the front of the classroom, and those who think the statement is false go to the back of the classroom. Students who were correct and can repeat the sentence win a point. Continue in the same way until all the statements have been read. The student with the most points at the end wins.

61 What's Different?

Bring four to six volunteers to the front of the classroom. Give each volunteer a flash card. Have the volunteers hold their cards so that the rest of the class can see them. Seated students make statements about the volunteers using the grammar pattern and the card the volunteer is holding. For example: if the grammar pattern is He/She likes (burgers) and a volunteer is holding the salad card, the student says (Mary) likes salad. When a statement has been made about each volunteer, seated students close their eyes and three to four of the volunteers exchange cards.

Lesson Format

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using the new vocabulary and grammar point.
  Materials needed: flashcards, Student Book, flip book, CD and CD player

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Practice sentence structures from the previous unit's conversation by writing a sentence from the previous conversation and substituting other words.

Have students take turns saying the dialog and substituting different words in the blanks.

Introduce the Conversation

1 Identify the characters in the conversation. Have students read the unit title, look at the pictures, and predict what might happen in the conversation.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin the CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played on the CD a second time. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they hear them.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box.

3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 Choose two students to come up to the front and act out the conversation. Have students move and act like they really would if they were on a ferry talking and taking pictures.

Games and Activities

1 Close books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, have students come up and tell what is happening in the picture. If they are able, have two students come up at a time to paraphrase the conversation.

2 Other games and activities will be given with each unit that are specific for that unit. In addition, there are multiple pages of games to use for the various different parts of the unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. An alternate activity with the Bebo question is to have each student write down what they think the answer is, and then the teacher walks around to check the responses. Some students may want to share their ideas.

2 Have students fold a sheet of paper into four parts. With books closed, see if students can write what happened in the conversation box. They can write what each person said, or they can tell about each box with a full sentence or two. Students should not focus on remembering the exact words but on the main idea of each box.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Review the vocabulary from the previous unit. Showing a flashcard a little at a time until students can guess what the word is, having a student write down a vocabulary word and then playing twenty questions to try and guess it, or writing words and their definitions in scrambled order for students to match are all good review activities. Many other vocabulary games and activities can be found in the Teacher's Book.

2 See if students can give a definition for and use each vocabulary word in a sentence. Talk about the parts of speech for some of the words, and point out unique features of words, such as a two-word compound word [car race], -ing verbs [swimming, chasing}, etc.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You call out the number, and the students choose that number.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Give each student a flashcard. When you or a student you choose says the word a student has, they must stand, show and say their word. Change words 2-3 times as time allows.

2 Play Wheel of Fortune with the vocabulary words. Students take turns choosing a word and going to the board to write lines for each letter in the word. Then students guess a letter. If the letter is in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter in the correct place. If it isn't in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter on the board. That letter counts as a minus point. After five points, the "teacher" is declared the winner and can give the answer. Then see if a student can use that word in a sentence.

3 Many other games and activities are in this introduction to the Teacher's Book, and they are listed by category (vocabulary, grammar, etc.)

Finish the Lesson

1 Describe five different vocabulary words and three phrases (see example descriptions below). Have students write down which words they think you are describing. Check the students' work for accuracy. Are most of the students learning the words? If not, do some extra practice and/or the first workbook page to practice vocabulary some more.

Examples: 1. This word has two syllables and is a noun. A house, store and office can be examples of this word. Robots might make these in the future. A*nswer: building*

2 This word tells what you can do with a car. It rhymes with "hive," and it is a verb. Answer: drive.

Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Developing reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of the grammar point, using the grammar point in writing, and understanding how to write for various genre.
Materials needed: Class Book, CD and CD player.

Introduce the Reading

1 Ask a thought-provoking question about the reading topic and generate discussion on the question. Use the discussion to introduce the reading passage.

2 Have students talk about the picture in the reading and make predictions about what they think it is.

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books, and then listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. The teacher may want to explain and assign one of the reading passages at this time.

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Ask some basic comprehension questions to be sure students are understanding the story correctly. Explain and assign the exercises on the reading page as homework or have the students do the exercises in class and then check.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. At times the teacher may wish to do an activity based on the Lolo question.

Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write a sentence from the reading that uses the grammar point. Discuss its structure, and see if students can think of a similar sentence but with a different verb.

2 See if students can find any other sentences with the grammar point in the reading passage. Briefly show the structure of those sentences.

3 Write a sentence on the board with a present tense verb. Can students change it so the verb (or other structure) matches the grammar point?

Practice the Grammar

1 Point out the reminder yellow banner at the top of the page that says, “Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?” [for the first few units only] Tell students that most exercises will not have a period at the end, and they will have to supply the end mark when they write sentences. Have students check the sentences in the grammar chart for end marks. What kinds of end marks do they have?

2 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. As applicable, note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question (e.g., the question form has the subject coming between the helping verb “will” and the main verb). Also note the structure of the sentence when a question word is used.

3 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups.

4 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, then either give students time to write the sentences down or assign the sentences for homework. The same can be done for Exercise C. Review the information in the Bebo boxes at the bottom of the page if it appears in the unit.

Games and Activities

1 Make cards ahead of time with large-sized index cards. Use sentences that illustrate the grammar point, and write one word per card. Pass out cards, one per student, then have students get up and try to make sentences by getting together with the correct students to make sentences that make sense. For large sentences, or for classes that need more structure, place students in groups, then hand out one set of cards per group and have each group put themselves in order to make a sentence using the grammar point.

2 A fun extension of this activity is to leave one word out of each sentence. Students must then put the sentence in order but also decide which word has been left out. It's best to leave out a word that is a part of the grammar point, such as "have" or a participle verb when studying about the present participle.

3 With students working in pairs or groups, write enough present tense sentences to have one per group. Give each group one present tense sentence. The group must then make the sentence into one with the grammar point structure, and have one group member write it on the board. The class then reads each sentence and tells what the present tense sentence was.

Finish the Lesson

To finish the lesson and assess student progress, the teacher can assign and correct Exercises B and C, or these same exercises can be done in class. In the latter case, for assessment, five basic sentences can be written on the board, and students are asked to change them into sentences that have the grammar point. Some changes might need to be made to the sentences depending on the grammar point for that unit.

1 My dad washes the car.
2 Nathan plays baseball.
3 The sun rises in the East.
4 My sister runs every day.
5 I read the book.

Introduce the Writing

1 Ask questions to generate interest about the writing example topic. Also note the writing point and briefly describe what it is.

2 Look at the picture for the writing section in the Class Book. Use it as a discussion starter to talk about the writing example and the writing point for the unit.

Practice the Writing

1 Read the paragraph(s) in the writing section aloud, or have students read it aloud. Clarify any words that students do not know.

2 Discuss the paragraph and talk about other possible topics for this same writing point.

3 Tell students that this is a(n) _____ paragraph. Read the writing tips and explain the tips. Ask students for their ideas about possible writing ideas.

4 Have students find the examples of the grammar point in the writing passage. Explain Exercise A and B. Either assign these exercises for homework or have students do them as classwork and check them as an informal assessment of student understanding.

Finish the Lesson

1 Do any follow-up class discussion or activity that might be necessary to solidify the writing point. Allow students time to read what they have written to the class, and encourage positive student feedback.

Warm-up and Review

1 Review the vocabulary and grammar points as needed. If students are still weak in knowledge of the vocabulary and/or understanding and use of the grammar point, this would be a good time to do several activities to give students further practice.

Introduce the Activities

1 Note the yellow reminder banner at the top of the page (for the first few units only). Review the vocabulary words by reading them and asking students to give their meanings. Also, the teacher can give a definition and students show a "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" to tell if they think the definition is correct or not.

2 Write the grammar point chart on the board and have students create sentences by putting appropriate words into the boxes on the chart.

Practice the Activities

1 Explain each of the exercises on the activity pages for the unit, using the directions to help you. Play the CD for the listening exercise if it is included on the activity pages. First, students listen with books closed. Then have students open their books, read the questions for the exercise, and follow along as you play the CD again. After the CD is stopped, have students answer the questions. It is also helpful to give students an opportunity to read the passage after they have heard the CD.

Additional Practice

The Right 4 Workbook for the corresponding unit offers ample additional practice for vocabulary and the grammar point. The pages can be assigned one or two per day, or as a unit to be due at the end of the week. There are six workbook pages per unit. In addition, many games and activities are suggested at the front of the teacher's guide that can easily be adapted for this unit's vocabulary and grammar point. Flashcards can be shown daily for students to read and learn the vocabulary, and the flip chart can be used for development of conversational skills.

Finish the Lesson

Check student work in the Class Book and review any vocabulary words or grammar that does not seem to be mastered. Encourage students to share on a certain topic, using the grammar point and/or the unit vocabulary. After one student shares, ask another student in the classroom to tell what the first student said (this encourages active listening at all times).

1 Robots of the Future

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of future tense will + verb in context.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and grammar point of future tense.

Materials needed: flashcards, Class Book, robot or related prop, flip book, and CD

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Write the Right characters' names on the board. Call on students who used the curriculum last year to tell about each character. Then see if new students can remember which character is which. If this is a new adoption, spend some time talking about each of the characters and how they are related. If time allows, this would be a good time to review physical characteristics: dark-haired, blue-eyed, tall, young, etc.

Introduce the Conversation

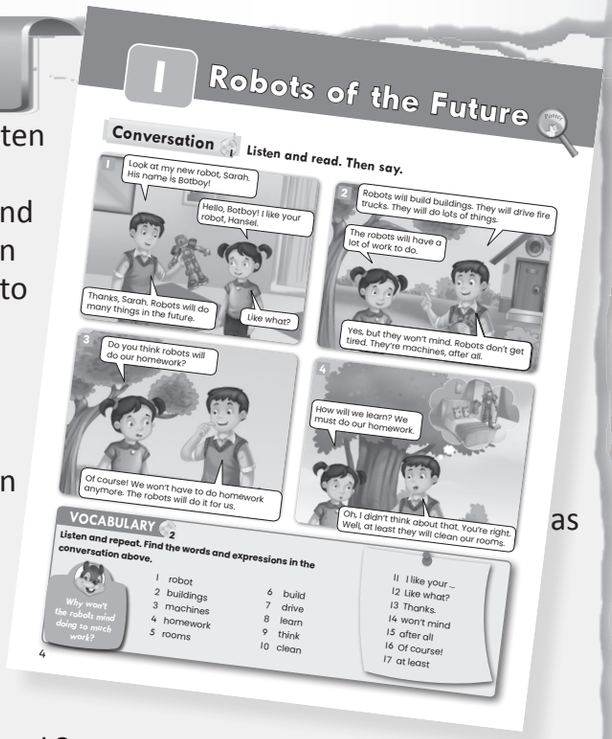
1 Identify the characters in the conversation. Have students read the title, look at the pictures, and predict what might happen in the conversation. Talk about robots and what the students know about robots.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played again on the CD. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Some question ideas are as follows:

a Box 1: What is Hansel excited about?
b (Box 2: What does Hansel think robots will do in the future?
c Box 3: Does Hansel think robots will do homework?
d Box 4: Why is Sarah probably right?



3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 Choose two students to come up to the front and act out the conversation. If possible, use a prop for the robot. Depending on student abilities, they can try it with or without their Class Book.

Games and Activities

1 Close books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, have students come up and tell what is happening in the picture. If they are able, have two students come up one at a time to paraphrase the conversation.

2 As time allows, have students mime a job they think that robots might do in the future or one that they already do. The other students guess what it is.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. An alternate activity with the Bebo question is to have each student write down what they think the answer is, and the teacher walks around to check the responses. Some students may want to share their ideas.

2 Have students fold a sheet of paper into four parts. With books closed, see if students can write what happened in the conversation box. They can write what each person said, or they can tell about each box with a full sentence or two. Students should not focus on remembering the exact words but on the main idea of each box.
Box 1: Hansel shows his new toy to Sarah.
Box 2: Sarah and Hansel talk about what robots might do in the future.
Box 3: Will robots do homework?
Box 4: They shouldn't do homework for us, but they can do other things.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Write one review word from Right 3, units 5-10, on the board for each student in the class. Some ideas for words would be:

chimney	bird	horse
stairs	field	fence
hall	student	cow
garage	street	clinic
winner	toy shop	gym
run	city	bank
race	class	swim
first	cottage	shovel

2 See if students can give a definition for and use each vocabulary word in a sentence. Talk about the parts of speech for some of the words, and point out unique features of words.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You would call out the number, and the students would choose that number.

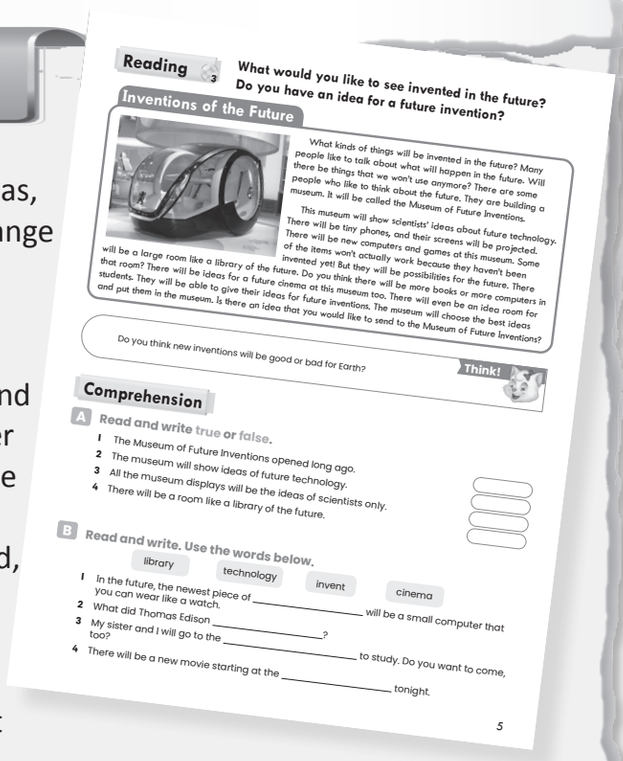
Games and Activities

1 Give each student a flashcard. When you or a student you choose says the word a student has, they must stand, show and say their word Change words 2-3 times as time allows.

If the letter is in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter in the correct place. If it isn't in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter on the board. That letter counts as a minus point. After five points, the "teacher" is declared the winner and can give the answer. Then see if a student can use that word in a sentence.



Reading 3

What would you like to see invented in the future? Do you have an idea for a future invention?

Inventions of the Future

What kinds of things will be invented in the future? Many people like to talk about what will happen in the future. Will there be things that we won't use anymore? There are some people who like to think about the future. They are building a museum. It will be called the Museum of Future Inventions.

This museum will show scientists' ideas about future technology. There will be tiny phones, and their screens will be projected. There will be new computers and games at this museum. Some of the items won't actually work because they haven't been invented yet! But they will be possibilities for the future. There will be a large room like a library of the future. Do you think there will be more books or more computers in that room? There will be ideas for a future cinema at this museum too. There will even be an idea room for students. They will be able to give their ideas for future inventions. The museum will choose the best ideas and put them in the museum. Is there an idea that you would like to send to the Museum of Future Inventions?

Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding use and structure of future tense verbs, using the grammar point in students' writing, and understanding how to write simple explanations.

Materials needed: Class Book, and CD, index cards, pictures of unusual inventions or actual examples of tools or gadgets that are unusual.

Introduce the Reading

1 Introduce the word future and see if students can explain its meaning. Have students give ideas about what they think might happen in the future. If magazines are available, see if students can find any pictures of things that look futuristic.

2 Have students talk about the picture in the reading and make predictions about what they think it is.

5

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books, and then listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Have students complete Exercise A page 5, and check their answers.

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Read the words in exercise B and have students repeat the words. Talk about the meanings of each of the words. Have students complete exercise B as you monitor students' answers.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. Make a chart on the board labeled "Good" on one side and "Bad" on the other. See if students can think of inventions that would fit in either part of the chart. For an extension activity, students could make their own chart of good or bad inventions, using their own drawings or magazine cut-outs.

Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write a sentence from the reading that uses "will" as a future tense. Write the same sentence in present tense. Talk about the difference in meaning between the two sentences. Ask students when they would use the future tense sentence.

2 See if students can find any other future tense sentences in the reading. Talk about their meaning, and compare the future tense with the same sentence in the present tense. Can students tell how to make a future tense sentence?

3 Write a present tense sentence on the board, such as "The doctor sees new patients." Can students change the sentence to the future? Write the future tense sentence on the board, "The doctor will see new patients."

6 Unit 1 Robots of the Future

1 Point out the reminder yellow banner at the top of the page that says, "Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?" Tell students that most exercises will not have a period at the end, and they will have to supply the end mark when they write sentences. Have students check the sentences in the grammar chart for end marks. What kinds of end marks do they have?

2 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question (the question form has the subject coming between the helping verb "will" and the main verb). Also note the structure of the sentence when a question word is used.

3 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. For more practice with the future tense, also practice substituting the following verbs for the second pattern: will cook, won't eat [note that "into" must change to "in"], will clean, won't paint [note that "into" should be left out].

4 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, then either give students time to write the sentences down or assign the sentences for homework. The same can be done for Exercise C. Review the information in the Bebo boxes at the bottom of the page, and have students change the grammar box sentence and sentences in Exercises A and B to use the pronoun + will contraction:

* We'll go to the coast.
* She'll go to the theater.
* She'll go to the market.

Games and Activities

1 Make cards ahead of time with large-sized index cards. Use sentences in the future tense, and write one word per card. Pass out cards, one per student, then have students get up and try to make sentences by getting together with the correct students to make sentences that make sense. For large sentences, or for classes that need more structure, place students in groups, then hand out one set of cards per group and have each group put themselves in order to make a sentence in the future tense.

2 A fun extension of this activity is to leave one word out of each sentence. Students must then put the sentence in order but also decide which word has been left out.

3 With students working in pairs or groups, write enough present tense sentences per group. Give each group one present tense sentence. The group must then make the sentence into a future tense sentence and have one group member write it on the board. The class then reads each future tense sentence and tells what the present tense sentence was.

Finish the Lesson

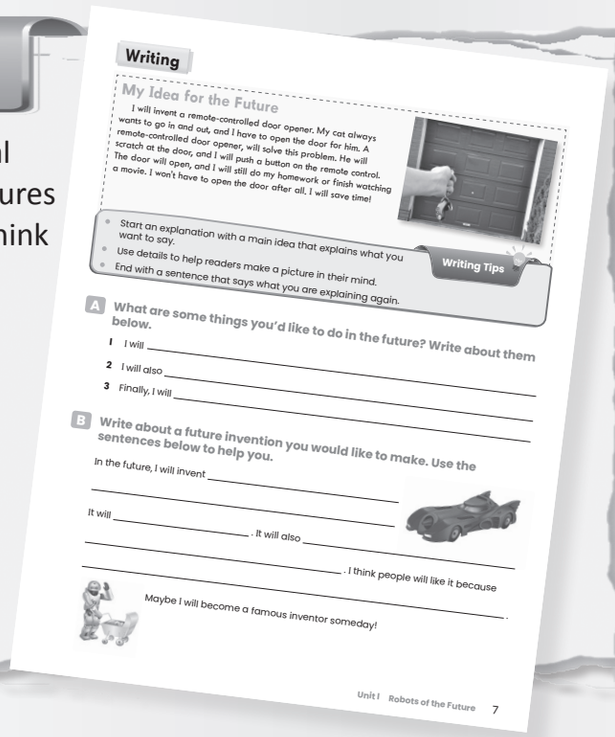
To finish the lesson and assess student progress, the teacher can assign and correct Exercises B and C, or these same exercises can be done in class. In the latter case, for assessment, five present tense sentences can be written on the board (see examples below), then students are asked to write the sentences in the future tense.

1 My mom bakes a cake on Monday.
2 Neil plays soccer tomorrow.
3 I start karate lessons soon.
4 My brother swims in a race.
5 Astronauts travel to Mars.

Introduce the Writing

1 Show pictures or bring in examples of unusual inventions or gadgets. Show the items or pictures to the class and ask the students what they think the things are. Discuss inventions. Have the students ever thought of a clever invention? Do students know of an interesting invention they've seen or used?

2 Look at the picture for the writing section in the Class Book. What invention is shown? Do any of the students have one? How is it helpful?



Writing

My Idea for the Future

I will invent a remote-controlled door opener. My cat always wants to go in and out, and I have to open the door for him. A remote-controlled door opener, will solve this problem. He will scratch at the door, and I will push a button on the remote control. The door will open, and I will still do my homework or finish watching a movie. I won't have to open the door after all. I will save time!

Writing Tips
- Start an explanation with a main idea that explains what you want to say.
- Use details to help readers make a picture in their mind.
- End with a sentence that says what you are explaining again.

A What are some things you'd like to do in the future? Write about them below.
1 I will _____
2 I will also _____
3 Finally, I will _____

B Write about a future invention you would like to make. Use the sentences below to help you.
In the future, I will invent _____
It will _____. It will also _____. I think people will like it because _____.
Maybe I will become a famous inventor someday!

Unit 1 Robots of the Future 7

Practice the writing

1 Read the paragraph in the writing section aloud, or have students read it aloud. Clarify any words that students do not know.

2 Discuss the paragraph and talk about other possible inventions that would help make life easier.

3 Tell students that this is an explanatory paragraph. Read the writing tips and explain the tips. Ask students for their ideas about possible inventions. Have them write some of their ideas in the Class Book on Exercise A.

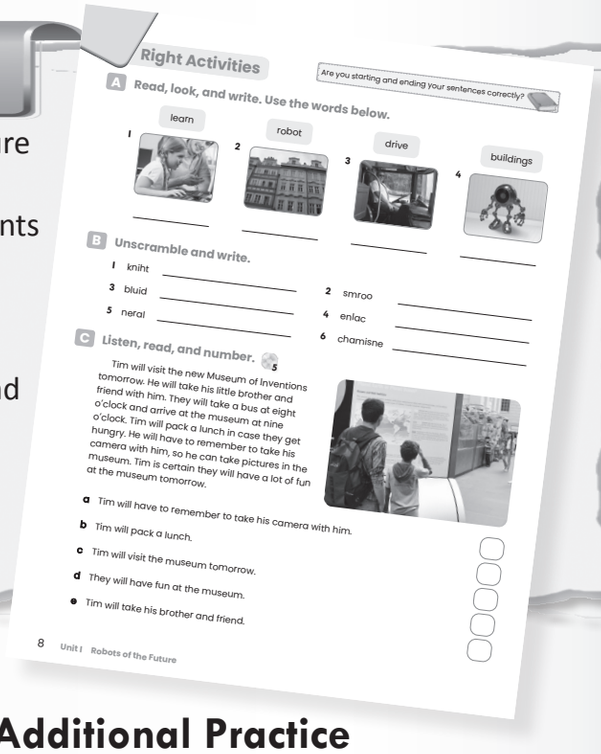
4 Have students find the examples of future tense in the writing passage. Also note the use of future tense in Exercise A. Next, read the direction for Exercise B with the class and give students ideas on how to fill in the blanks. Exercise B can be assigned for homework or done in class as time allows.

Finish the Lesson

1 After students are finished with Exercise B, allow time for them to read their ideas aloud. Encourage them to use the future tense as they do so.

Warm-up and Review

1 Write a present tense, a past tense, and a future tense sentence on the board. Have students identify which tense each sentence is. If students need the extra practice, have students work in groups. Write three headings on the board: present, past and future. Give each group five sentences of different tenses (past, present and future) and some tape. Next, students read the sentences, then tape the sentences into the correct group on the board. Check the sentences in each group as a class.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Read, look, and write. Use the words below.

B Unscramble and write.

1 kniht _____ 2 smroo _____

3 bluid _____ 4 enlac _____

Tim will visit the new Museum of Inventions tomorrow. He will take his little brother and friend with him. They will take a bus at eight o'clock and arrive at the museum at nine o'clock. Tim will pack a lunch in case they get hungry. He will have to remember to take his camera with him, so he can take pictures in the museum. Tim is certain they will have a lot of fun at the museum tomorrow.

a Tim will have to remember to take his camera with him.

b Tim will pack a lunch.

c Tim will visit the museum tomorrow.

d They will have fun at the museum.

e Tim will take his brother and friend.

Introduce the Activities

1 Note the yellow reminder banner at the top of the page. Review the vocabulary words by reading them and asking students to give their meanings. Also, the teacher can give a definition and students show a "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" to tell if they think the definition is correct or not.

2 Give students several verbs and have them tell the future tense for each verb. Next, write a future tense positive statement and have students change it into a future tense negative and a future tense question.

Practice the Activities

1 Explain each of the exercises on pages 8-9, using the directions to help you. Play the CD for exercise C once as students listen with books closed. Then have students open their books, read the questions for exercise C, and follow along as you play the CD again. After the CD is stopped, have students answer the questions. It is also helpful to give students an opportunity to read the passage after they have heard the CD.

Additional Practice

1 The Right 4 Workbook pages 3-8 offers ample additional practice for vocabulary and the grammar point for unit 1. The pages can be assigned one or two per day, or as a unit to be due at the end of the week. In addition, many games and activities are suggested at the front of the teacher's guide that can easily be adapted for this unit's vocabulary and grammar point. Also, flashcards can be shown daily for students to read and learn the vocabulary, and the flip chart can be used as a review by having students tell about what the children in the conversation will be doing (instead of what they have already done).

Finish the Lesson

Check student work in the Class Book and review any vocabulary words or grammar that does not seem to be mastered. Spend a few minutes at the end of class to talk about what students will do this week. Encourage students to share, using future tense, what they plan to do for the coming week. After one student shares, ask another student in the classroom to tell what the first student said (this encourages active listening at all times).

2 Welcome to the Big Apple!

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of going to + verb.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and grammar point of going to + verb.
- Materials needed: flashcards, Student Book, flip book, and CD

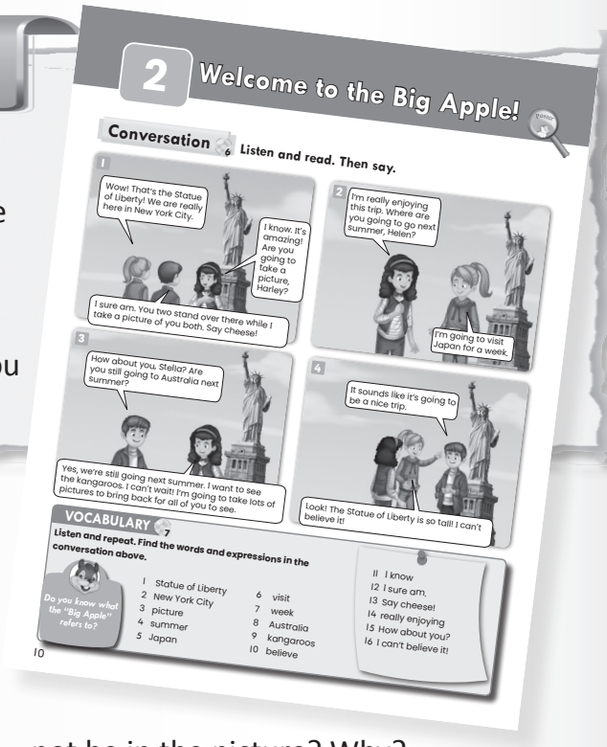
Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Practice sentence structures in unit 1's conversation by writing the following sentence parts on the board:
S1: Look at _____ (student names an interesting noun).
S2: Hello, _____ I like _____.
Have students take turns saying the dialog and substituting different words in the blanks. The same activity can be done with the following dialog, to practice the future tense:
S1: Do you think _____ will _____?
S2: You bet! We won't _____.

Introduce the Conversation

1 Identify the characters in the conversation. Have students read the unit title, look at the pictures, and predict what might happen in the conversation. What might the "Big Apple" be? [The "Big Apple" is a nickname for a very large city in America, New York City, probably called that because of its size and importance.] Do you recognize any of the buildings?



Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played on CD a second time. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they hear them.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Some question ideas are as follows:

a Box 1: What is Helen looking at? Who will not be in the picture? Why?

b Box 2: Does Helen's family travel often?

c Box 3: What does Stella want to do in Australia?

d Box 4: Why are the children getting closer to the statue? [Note: the usual word for what the children are on is called a ferry, but depending on student's abilities, it might be better to teach the more general term boat here.]

3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 Choose two students to come up to the front and act out the conversation. Have students move and act like they really would if they were on a ferry talking and taking pictures.

Games and Activities

1 Close books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, have students come up and tell what is happening in the picture. If they are able, have two students come up at a time to paraphrase the conversation.

2 For each place name, substitute a different location for the conversation. Then have students read the same conversation, making changes as necessary. Place names to be changed would be Statue of Liberty, New York City, Japan, Tokyo, Australia, and Outback. Other changes would need to occur such as the Japanese gardens, kangaroos, etc. It would be best to assign a different number box to each pair or group of students. Give those students time to make their changes, then the students can read them for the class.

3 As an enrichment activity, bring in pictures of famous places from around the world. See if students can identify some of the places, and talk about what each one is famous for, what each one is like, etc. A good cultural activity would be to bring in famous places from English-speaking countries.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students know that "Big Apple" is used to refer to someone or something important. See if students can come up with a more specific answer than in the introductory discussion. An alternate activity with the Bebo question is to have each student write down what they think the answer is, and then the teacher walks around to check the responses. Let some students share their ideas to generate discussion.

2 Have students close books. Write Harley's, Stella's and Helen's names on the board. See if students can name where each child is going next summer [Also see if they notice that the reader isn't told if Harley is going anywhere or not]. Ask the following questions and see if students can answer them or not.

1. Who is taking pictures?
2. What is Helen looking forward to about going to Japan?
3. What special place in Australia will Stella visit?
4. What do the children think about the Statue of Liberty?

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Let one student at a time be the "teacher." All the other students wait with their books closed while the "teacher" looks at the vocabulary words from unit 1. The "teacher" asks about three words or phrases from unit to see if students remember their meaning. Then let another student be "teacher" until most of the vocabulary has been asked. If there are some words or phrases that students don't remember, write those on the board and ask about them at the end of the lesson.

2 Have students open books to unit 1's vocabulary page. As time allows, write a sentence on the board with a unit 1 vocabulary word missing, and see if students can find the word. Here are some example sentences:

a The big _____ made a lot of noise as they built the skyscrapers.
b Are you finished with all your _____, or do you still have math to do?
c My dad is going to _____ a closet for my room.
d My aunt bought a _____ vacuum cleaner that will clean the floor while she's gone.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You call out the number, and the students choose that number.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Write a word on the board. Have a student draw a box around the word in the shape of the word. This way, students will note where the tall letters are and where the letters are that go below the line. Erase the word inside the box and have the students notice the shape. Do this with several vocabulary words and phrases.

Games and Activities

1 Place flashcards along the chalk tray, or hang in the classroom in a place where students can access them. Say a vocabulary word and a student's name. That student must go quickly to the word and point to it, then return to his/her desk. To avoid embarrassment, have other students in the class give clues or help the student find the word if s/he doesn't know it.

2 Students get out scratch paper. Give three clues about a word or phrase, then give students a few seconds to write down what they think the word is. Students then hold up their word for you to check. Note if the class is remembering the words or not, and if any one student is having difficulty, make a note so s/he can receive extra help as needed.

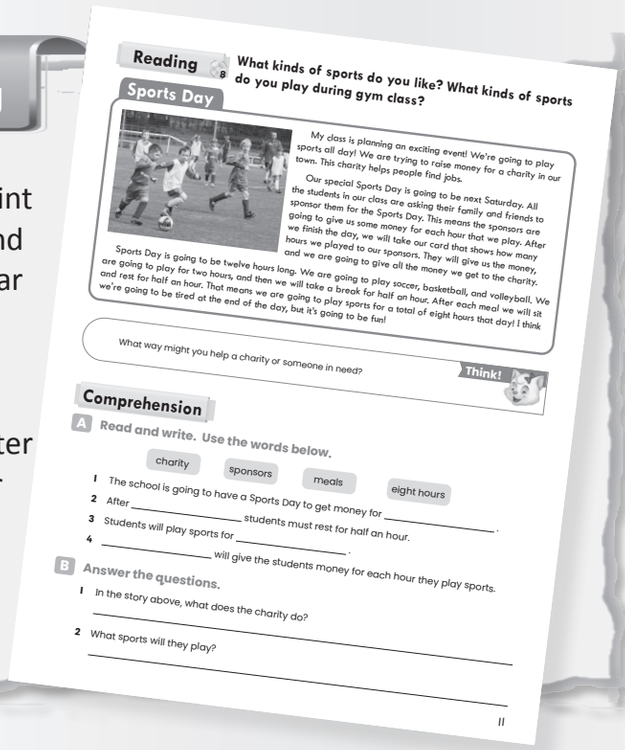
Finish the Lesson

1 This is a good time to assign the first page of unit 2 workbook. Also at this time, call out different numbers and have the class or individual students read the word that corresponds with that number. Also see if the student(s) can give a sentence with the word in it.

Reading, Grammar and Writing

1 Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of going to + verb, using the grammar point in students' writing, and understanding how to format and write a friendly e-mail.

2 Materials needed: Class Book, CD and computer and internet access (optional), a sample letter on stationery with an envelope, and a sample email (both optional)



Reading 8 What kinds of sports do you like? What kinds of sports do you play during gym class?

Sports Day

My class is planning an exciting event! We're going to play sports all day! We are trying to raise money for a charity in our town. This charity helps people find jobs.

Our special Sports Day is going to be next Saturday. All the students in our class are asking their family and friends to sponsor them for the Sports Day. This means the sponsors are going to give us some money for each hour that we play. After we finish the day, we will take our card that shows how many hours we played to our sponsors. They will give us the money, and we are going to give all the money we get to the charity.

Sports Day is going to be twelve hours long. We are going to play soccer, basketball, and volleyball. We are going to play for two hours, and then we will take a break for half an hour. After each meal we will sit and rest for half an hour. That means we are going to play sports for a total of eight hours that day! I think we're going to be tired at the end of the day, but it's going to be fun!

What way might you help a charity or someone in need? Think!

Comprehension

A Read and write. Use the words below.

charity sponsors meals eight hours

1 The school is going to have a Sports Day to get money for _____.
2 After _____ students must rest for half an hour.
3 Students will play sports for _____.
4 _____ will give the students money for each hour they play sports.

B Answer the questions.

1 In the story above, what does the charity do?
2 What sports will they play?

Introduce the Reading

1 Talk about the word charity and ask students to tell what they know about giving to charity. Some students have probably experienced their parents giving to charity in some way, or perhaps the school has some type of charity that students can do.

2 Also talk about the word sponsor and explain that this means a person or business who will accept responsibility for another. In the reading, a sponsor would accept financial responsibility for a Sports Day student.

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books, and then listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Read each of the words in the oval in Exercise A. Also find the words in the reading and see if students can figure out what the words mean. Then have students complete Exercise A and check.

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud, one sentence or paragraph at a time. Ask short questions just a few times during the reading to check for understanding. Keep them brief so the flow of the reading isn't interrupted.

2 What are the students going to do on Sports Day? See if students can write down a schedule for that day. Tell students that the day will begin at 7:00 a.m. Students can write individually or in groups. Monitor their writing for accuracy, and show students how to check their schedules with the information given in the reading.

3 Talk about Exercise B and either have students complete it in class or assign it for homework as time allows.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. Talk about various types of charity and things to consider when choosing a charity. Talk about different ways that everyone can contribute to charity. Is there something the school could do to help those in need?

Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write the following two sentences:

a Dan will exercise at the gym tomorrow.

b Dan is going to exercise at the gym.

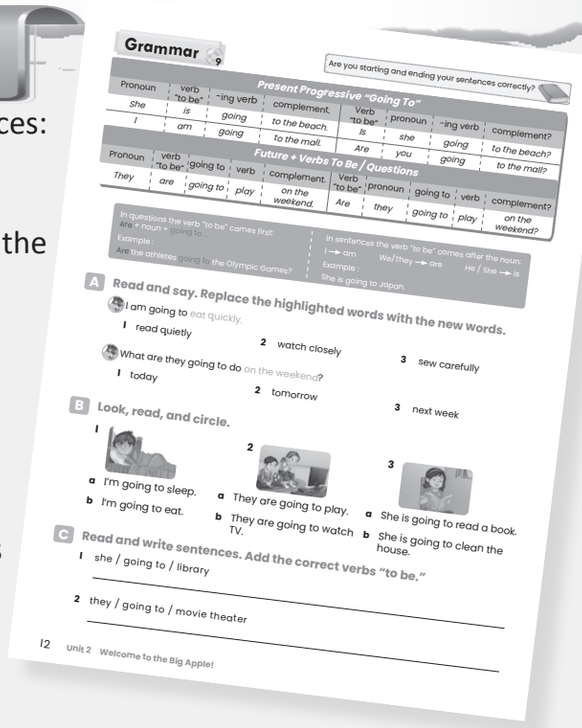
Note the different verb tenses and talk about the different uses for each sentence.

Next, write a sentence from the reading that uses the going to + verb tense. Write the same sentence in present tense. Talk about the difference in meaning between the two sentences. Now write the same sentence in the future tense that uses will + a verb. Is the meaning the same or different? See examples below for sentence ideas:

a We're going to play sports all day.

b We play sports all day.

c We will play sports all day.



Grammar 9

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

Present Progressive "Going To"

Pronoun	verb "to be"	-ing verb	complement.
She	is	going	to the beach.
I	am	going	to the mall.

Verb "to be"	pronoun	-ing verb	complement?

They	are	going to	play	on the weekend.

Verb "to be"	Pronoun	going to	verb	complement?
Are	they	going to	play	on the weekend?

In questions the verb "to be" comes first:
Are + noun + going to ...
Example :
Are the athletes going to the Olympic Games?

In sentences the verb "to be" comes after the noun:
I → am We/they → are He / She → is Example :
She is going to Japan.

A Read and say. Replace the highlighted words with the new words.

1 I am going to eat quickly.
I read quietly
2 watch closely
3 sew carefully

What are they going to do on the weekend?
1 today
2 tomorrow
3 next week

b I'm going to eat.

2
a They are going to play.

a She is going to read a book.
b She is going to clean the house.

C Read and write sentences. Add the correct verbs "to be."

1 she / going to / library
2 they / going to / movie theater

12 Unit 2 Welcome to the Big Apple!

1 See if students can find any other going to + verb sentences in the reading. Talk about their meaning, and compare this tense with the same sentence in the will + verb future tense. Change the going to + verb sentences in unit 2 to regular future tense, and change the future tense verbs in unit 1 to going to + verb sentences, as time allows.

Practice the Grammar

1 Point out the reminder yellow banner at the top of the page that says, "Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?" Tell students that most exercises will not have a period at the end, and they will have to supply the end mark when they write sentences. Have students check the sentences in the grammar chart for end marks. What kinds of end marks do they have?

2 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. First, note the difference between the present progressive (where she is going) and going to + verb. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question (the question form has the subject coming between the helping verb and going to + verb). At this time, read and discuss the information in the Bebo box at the bottom of the page.

3 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. For further practice, students could take some of the future tense sentences from unit 1 and change them to going to + verb sentences.

4 Ask student volunteers to read the pairs of sentences for number 1 of Exercise B. Talk about what each one means, then ask students to circle the correct sentence. Do the same for numbers 2 and 3. Ask students to complete Exercise C independently, reminding them they can use the grammar box to help. Check their answers as a quick assessment of understanding of the grammar points.

Games and Activities

1 Begin a hand clap rhythm such as "knees, knees, hands, hands, knees, hands, knees, hands, snap (one side), snap (other side).

Have one student say a sentence in the future tense (you may want to have some future tense sentences already on the board), then call on another student. The class then begins the hand clap, with you leading to keep the rhythm at the correct tempo. Before they finish, the student who was named tries to say the same sentence but with gong to + verb. Some sentences to put on the board are as follows:

a We will go to the park. [here point out to students that going to go is a common usage in English]
b Victor will ride his bike to school.
c Our teacher will give a test tomorrow.
d Mike will visit us next week.
e Jonathan will meet us at the mall.
f Who will wash the dishes tonight?

2 Have a group discussion about what students are planning to do next week. Divide students into groups. Decide who will start, then each student shares in a counterclockwise pattern. Students must say, " I am going on a trip, and I'm [or I am} going to _____," filling in the blank with a verb. The first student to say a sentence only says one verb. However, the second student must say the verb of the first student plus the verb s/he wants to do. If there are eight students in the group, then, the eighth students must remember and say all eight verbs.

3 A slight variation of this game is to have students just say one verb, but each time the verb must begin with a different letter of the alphabet, in order through the alphabet. Thus, student one uses a verb that starts with an "a," student two uses a verb that starts with a "b," etc. To gear this activity to different ability levels, you could eliminate some of the harder letters of the alphabet , or only do verbs that start with consonants.

Finish the Lesson

1 To finish the lesson and assess student progress, the teacher can assign workbook page 11, or write the following sentence patterns on the board and have students write the sentences with going to + verb.
a Hansel/take/picture
b Helen/ see/ Japanese gardens
c Stella/ visit/the Outback

Introduce the Writing

1 Show students a sample post office letter and a sample e-mail. See which one students are most familiar with. Compare for the students how long emails have been commonly used (a couple of decades or so) vs. how long letters have been used (since papyrus or maybe earlier, although delivery methods have changed greatly).

2 Have students sent or receive e-mails from people? Have students give examples of some of the emails they have sent or received.

Dear Aunt Sharon,

How are you? We're fine. School has started, and I like my teacher a lot this year. Does Amanda like her new school? Has she made a lot of new friends?

My school is going to have a sports marathon next week. We are going to play sports for eight hours in one day. We are asking people to sponsor us for each hour that we play. Then, we are going to give the money to a charity that helps the poor.

Do you want to sponsor me? Let me know and tell me how much you will give me for each hour. Then, when I'm done with the Sports Day, I'll tell you how many hours I played for so you can send me the money for the charity. I'm excited about playing sports for a whole day!

I hope we can see you soon. I miss you, and I want to play with Amanda.

With love,

Emily

Writing Tips

- Use a greeting with a comma after it.
- Use a closing with a comma after it.
- Leave a line after the greeting and before the closing.
- Ask the person about themselves and tell them interesting things about yourself.

B Pretend you are writing to your friend and you want to tell them what you are going to do next week. Use the letters above and the sentences below to help you write an e-mail to them. Use a separate piece of paper.

Dear _____, How are you? I'm fine. I'm going to _____.

Maybe we can _____. Write soon. Your friend,

Unit 2 Welcome to the Big Apple! 13

Practice the Writing

1 Have students point to and identify the different parts of the e-mail in the Class Book page 13. Read the writing section aloud, or have students read it aloud. Clarify any words that students do not know.

2 Discuss the e-mail and compare it with the Sports Day from the reading section. Are both writers talking about the same Sports Day? Who is Amanda?

3 Read the Writing Tips with the students, then have students read the e-mail again. Does Emily use the Writing Tips in her letter?

4 Have students find the examples of going to + verb in the writing passage. Talk about and define the parts of an e-mail by naming the parts and having students point to them. Also identify the parts of the e-mail in Exercise A.

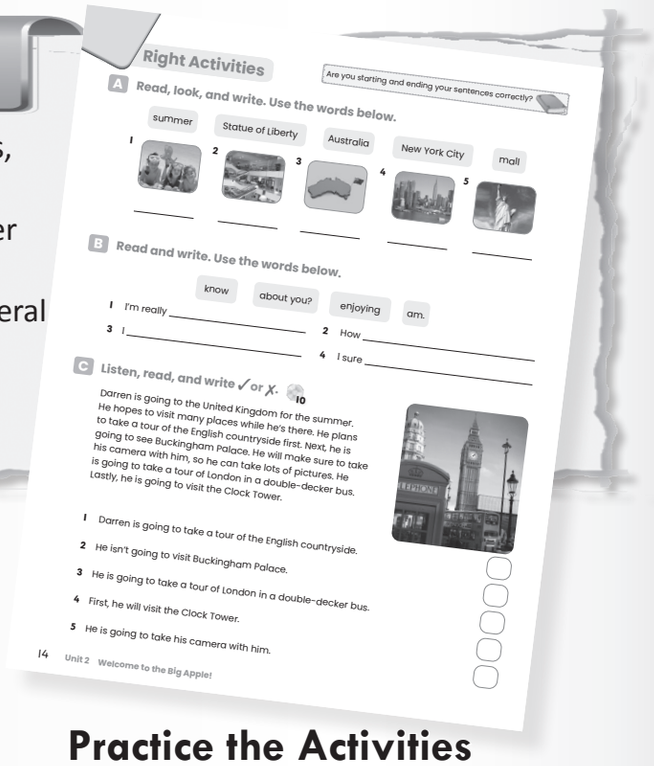
5 Explain and assign Exercise A for students to complete individually. Check students' answers in class.

Finish the Lesson

Assign Exercise B for the students to do as homework, reminding them to follow the same format as the e-mail examples on the same page. Remind students that they should never send an e-mail unless they have specific permission from their parents and/or teacher. When the students bring their finished e-mail assignments, allow some class time for the students to read their emails. As time allows, have students check each others' e-mails for the greeting, the closing, commas, and the correct date.

Warm-up and Review

1 Write a vocabulary word on the board. In pairs, have one student ask a question with the vocabulary word and going to + verb. The other students answer, also using the word and the grammar point structure. Repeat this with several vocabulary words and phrases, choosing ones that students may have had difficulty with earlier in the unit.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Read, look, and write. Use the words below.

summer | Statue of Liberty | Australia | New York City | mall

B Read and write. Use the words below.

know | about you? | enjoying | am.

1 I'm really _____ 2 How _____

3 I _____ 4 I sure _____

C Listen, read, and write ✓ or ✗. 10

Darren is going to the United Kingdom for the summer. He hopes to visit many places while he's there. He plans to take a tour of the English countryside first. Next, he is going to see Buckingham Palace. He will make sure to take his camera with him, so he can take lots of pictures. He is going to take a tour of London in a double-decker bus. Lastly, he is going to visit the Clock Tower.

1 Darren is going to take a tour of the English countryside.
2 He isn't going to visit Buckingham Palace.
3 He is going to take a tour of London in a double-decker bus.
4 First, he will visit the Clock Tower.
5 He is going to take his camera with him.

Introduce the Activities

1 Note the yellow reminder banner at the top of the page. Review the vocabulary words by reading them on the first page of the unit and asking students to give their meanings. Also, the teacher can give a definition and students show a "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" to tell if they think the definition is correct or not.

2 Give students several verbs and have them write a sentence with going to + verb for each one. Check students' responses for accuracy.

Practice the Activities

1 Explain each of the exercises on pages 8-9, using the directions to help you. Play the CD for exercise C once as students listen with books closed. Then have students open their books, read the questions for exercise C, and follow along as you play the CD again. After the CD is stopped, have students answer the questions. It is also helpful to give students an opportunity to read the passage after they have heard the CD. For advanced students, encourage them to answer the questions without reading the passage. If necessary, they can hear the passage for a third time.

Additional Practice

1 The Right 4 Workbook pages 9-14 offers ample additional practice for vocabulary and the grammar point for unit 2. The pages can be assigned one or two per day, or as a unit to be due at the end of the week. In addition, many games and activities are suggested at the front of the teacher's guide that can easily be adapted for this unit's vocabulary and grammar point. Also, flashcards can be shown daily for students to read and learn the vocabulary, and the flip chart can be used as a review by having students tell about what the children in the conversation are going to do (instead of what they have already done).

Finish the Lesson

1 Check student work in the Class Book and review any vocabulary words or grammar that does not seem to be mastered. Spend a few minutes at the end of class to talk about what students are going to do this week. Encourage students to share, using going to + verb, what they plan to do for the coming week. First the teacher asks the students questions about what they are going to do, then the students can ask the teacher about what s/he is going to do. Both the questions and the answers should use g*oing to + verb*.

John will / won't fly a kite while at the beach. He will / won't sit in the sand while reading a book.

16 Review I

1 To prepare for the review unit, teachers should now review units 1 and 2 with the class. Many of the activities explained in the introductory pages of the teacher's guide could be used at this time by simply making any adjustments necessary to fit the vocabulary and grammar points specific for the unit. This is also a good time to have students do different activities in groups that are formed based on abilities or learning styles. For example, to practice vocabulary words, one group could form the words from clay or play dough and have their group-mates identify the words when blindfolded. Another group could listen to and repeat the words, then take turns using them aloud in sentences. A third group could trace the shapes of the words, then try to guess which word each shape is when they are shown just the shape without the letters inside. Still another group could play a bingo game with the flashcards that have been copied off, one set per group member.

2 Differentiation activities can also be used at this time. One group that demonstrates mastery of the vocabulary and grammar point might be given an activity to write a travel brochure about what a tour group is going to do on a certain trip. Another group that has not yet learned the vocabulary words could play a flashcard game. A student who was absent for several days could receive individual help from the teacher or a peer tutor at this time. The goal is for all students to have achieved mastery of the vocabulary and the grammar point by the end of the review lessons.

3 Harley Ate All the Sweets

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of the past tense of have.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using the new vocabulary and the grammar point for the unit.

Materials needed: flashcards of the words as well as teacher-made ones of the phrases, Class Book, a typed-out version of the conversation with spaces between each person's lines, flip book, and CD.

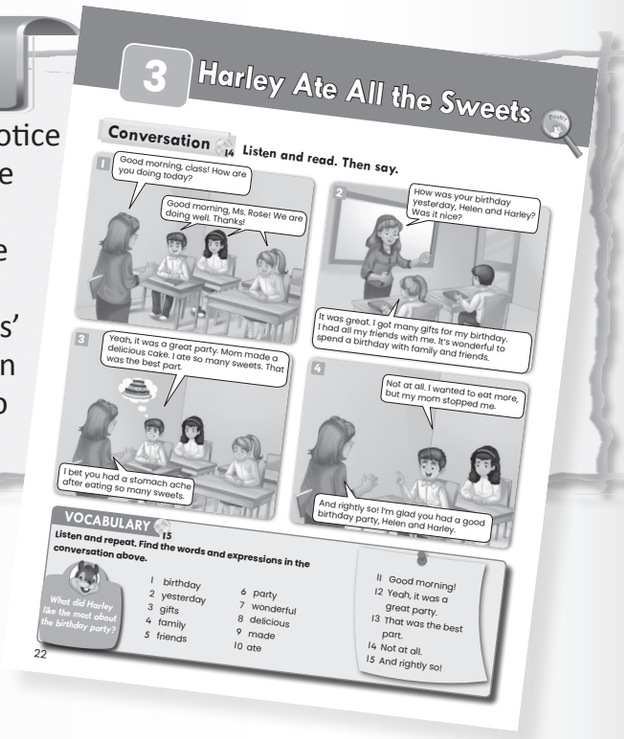
Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Write The Big Apple, Stella, Helen and Harley on the board. See if students remember from unit 2 which city is the Big Apple and where the children will go next summer (also see if they can tell that nothing is mentioned for Harvey).

Introduce the Conversation

1 As a routine for good reading, have students notice the title of the unit, notice which characters are in the conversation, and look at the pictures. With this information, see if students can make predictions about what the conversation is about. A fun variation is to write three students' predictions and their names on the board. Then at the end of reading the conversation see who was correct.



Practice the Conversation

1 Begin the CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played again on the CD. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read. Ask basic questions about the conversation to see if students understand what they read.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. It is a good idea to have a classroom system to insure that each child gets practice reading the conversation. Each child could have a number, and you could go in numerical order for each conversation. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Students who struggle excessively with reading aloud could be assigned a character with a smaller part. After finishing the conversation, ask some comprehension questions. Some question ideas are as follows:

a (Box 1) What is the teacher's name?
b (Box 2) What did Helen and Harley do yesterday?
c (Box 3) What did Harley remember most about the party?

d (Box 4)Which subject will the students study first?

3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 In addition, two students could be asked to come up and act out the conversation.

Games and Activities

1 Have students close their books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, on the flip chart, have a student describe the box and what each person had in the picture. Encourage them to use the past tense of have.

2 Have the students change Helen's description of the party, plus the next three lines for Harley and the teacher, then say the conversation.

3 Copy the lines of conversation and cut them into strips. Give one set to every two students. Working in pairs, have the students put the conversation together.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. As an extension activity, let each student in turn say one word of the answer for the Bebo question. For example, the answer for the question for this unit could be like the following:

S1: Harley S2: liked S3: the S4: sweets S5: the S6: most S7: at S8: the S9: birthday
S10: party

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Have students clap the syllables of the vocabulary from unit 2. How many syllables does each word and phrase have?

2 How many words do students recognize? Do they know their meanings? As a teacher, try to work as many of the vocabulary phrases as possible into your teaching for the day. Hearing them in context will also encourage the students to use them.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You call out the number, and the students choose that number.

Practice the Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Give each student a flashcard and ask them to come to the front of the room. Ask students to arrange themselves so they're in a certain order. For example, have them stand with the words in alphabetical order or reverse alphabetical order; by nouns, verbs and adjectives; by the order they appear in the conversation (have a book handy for students to refer to), etc.

2 Give each student a number up to the number of words and phrases. Call out a number at random. The student with that number stands up, says his/her word and uses it in a sentence.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 In pairs or groups, have students quiz each other on the words. S1 gives clues about a vocabulary word or phrase. S2 or the rest of the group try to guess the word. Students must choose words that have not already been given, until the whole list has been done. Some example clues are a This words means "tastes very good," and it has a consonant and vowel that make one sound together. It has a partial rhyme with "nutritious." Answer: delicious

b This word has many rhymes. It is the shortest word in the list, and it is the past of a verb that we all do often. Answer: ate

Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of the tenses of have, using the grammar point in students' writing, and understanding how to format and write a descriptive account.
Materials needed: Class Book, and CD, pictures of students' rooms as they volunteer to bring them in.

Introduce the Reading

1 Ask students to show their pictures. They could be of their rooms or just of a favorite thing in their rooms. If any students have pictures of how their rooms used to look when they were little, encourage them to bring those also. Note how each room is the same or different. Which things in the room let you know something about the person—e.g., how old they are, what kinds of things they like, etc.?

2 Notice the picture in the reading and make a chart on the board. Make two columns, "Baby" and "Child." Have students list the different things that children of different ages would need in their rooms. Tell students to pay attention during the reading to see if they find anything else for the list.

Listen to the Reading

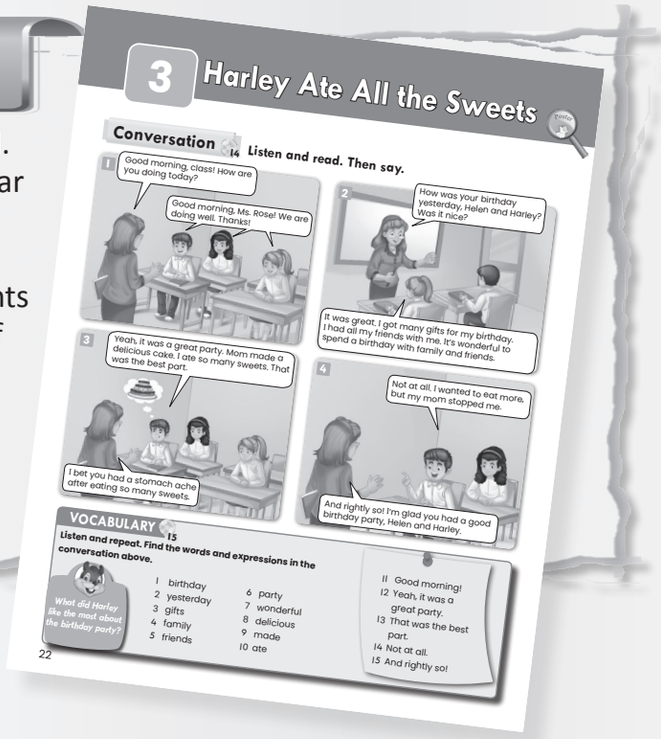
1 Students close their books and listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Have students complete Exercise A page 5, and check their answers. If many answers are wrong, have students correct them after completing #1 in "Practice the Reading."

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Read the words in exercise B and have students repeat the words. Talk about the meanings of each of the words. Have students complete exercise B as you monitor students' answers. Talk about other words that came up while making the list on the board or the list for Exercise A.



3 Harley Ate All the Sweets

Conversation 14 Listen and read. Then say.

1 Good morning, class! How are you doing today?
Good morning, Ms. Rose! We are doing well. Thanks!

2 How was your birthday yesterday, Helen and Harley? Was it nice?
It was great. I got many gifts for my birthday. I had all my friends with me. It's wonderful to spend a birthday with family and friends.

3 Yeah, it was a great party. Mom made a delicious cake. I ate so many sweets. That was the best part.
I bet you had a stomach ache after eating so many sweets.

4 Not at all. I wanted to eat more, but my mom stopped me.
And rightly so! I'm glad you had a good birthday party, Helen and Harley.

VOCABULARY 15
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.

What did Harley like the most about the birthday party?

1 birthday
2 yesterday
3 gifts
4 family
5 friends
6 party
7 wonderful
8 delicious
9 made
10 ate
11 Good morning!
12 Yeah, it was a great party.
13 That was the best part.
14 Not at all.
15 And rightly so!

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. Add a third column to the chart on the board, "young adult." See if students can add details to that column on the chart.

Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write the labels present and past. Put a present tense verb on the board and ask students to give its past form. Finally, put have/has on the board. Be sure that students know its past tense form.

2 Review common classroom supplies that might be encountered in naming items in students' backpacks: eraser, pen, pencil, notebook, lunch, thermos, pencil case, etc.

24 Unit 3 Harley Ate All the Sweets

Practice the Grammar

1 Point out the reminder yellow banner at the top of the page that says, "Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?" Tell students that most exercises will not have a period at the end, and they will have to supply the end mark when they write sentences. Have students check the sentences in the grammar chart for end marks. What kinds of end marks do they have?

2 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question, and note the question words that are used. Also note the structure of the sentence when a question word is used. What part of speech comes after the verb "had?" [a noun] Do Exercise A, practicing the patterns and vocabulary.

3 Ask students to take one item from their backpack that is not valuable. If necessary, make a list of who is giving what. Then quiz students about the items, using the pattern below:
T: Who had the eraser?
S: _____ had the eraser. OR
S: _____didn't have the eraser, _____ had it.

4 Review the yellow Bebo boxes at the bottom of the page. See if students can find some examples of the contractions in their books.

Games and Activities

1 Have 3-4 students come up to the front of the classroom. Tell or show each student a word in a "had + noun" sentence. The students must talk among themselves and get into the correct order. Once they are in order, students must call out their word in sequence to make a sentence.

2 An alternate activity is to have students mime their word instead of saying it to the class. Then the rest of the class tries to guess what each word in the sentence is ("the" and "a" are included with the noun). For the subject, the student can motion to an appropriate person, for "have" the student can bring their hands to their chest to show ownership, etc.

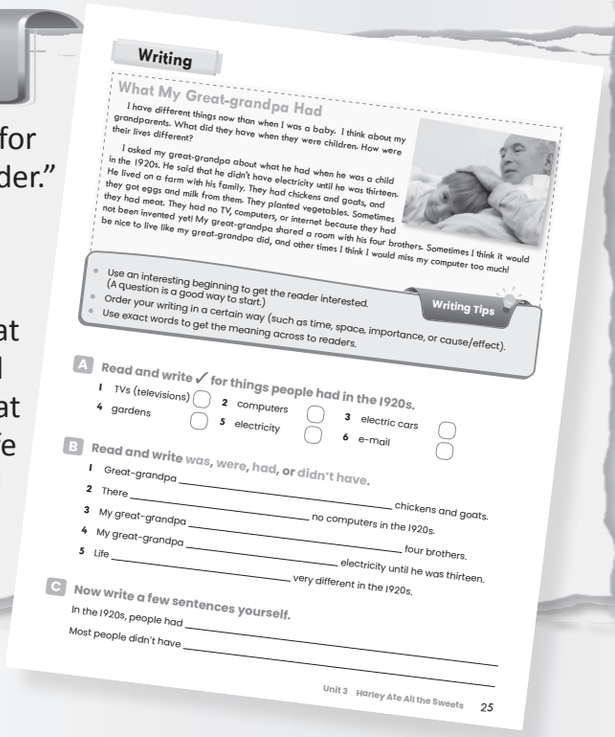
Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Explain the remaining grammar exercises to the students and have them complete the exercises in class or for homework. Use the time of checking student answers as a time to review and reinforce the grammar point. If students need more practice, this would be a good time to assign a workbook page about the grammar point. Workbook pages 19 and 20 have exercises specifically about the grammar point

Introduce the Writing

1 Write a chart on the board similar to the one for the reading passage. Label "younger" and "older." Have students list some things that they have currently that are part of the modern world: I-phones, computers, automobiles, etc. Then have students think of their oldest relative that they see often and list things that relative had when they were young. Let students know that they will be reading a passage that is about life in the 1920s. Have students read the title and look at the picture.



Writing

What My Great-grandpa Had

I have different things now than when I was a baby. I think about my grandparents. What did they have when they were children. How were their lives different?

I asked my great-grandpa about what he had when he was a child in the 1920s. He said that he didn't have electricity until he was thirteen. He lived on a farm with his family. They had chickens and goats, and they got eggs and milk from them. They planted vegetables. Sometimes they had meat. They had no TV, computers, or internet because they had not been invented yet! My great-grandpa shared a room with his four brothers. Sometimes I think it would be nice to live like my great-grandpa did, and other times I think I would miss my computer too much!

Writing Tips

- Use an interesting beginning to get the reader interested. (A question is a good way to start.)
- Order your writing in a certain way (such as time, space, importance, or cause/effect).
- Use exact words to get the meaning across to readers.

A Read and write ✓ for things people had in the 1920s.

1 TVs (televisions) ☐ 2 computers ☐ 3 electric cars ☐
4 gardens ☐ 5 electricity ☐ 6 e-mail ☐

B Read and write was, were, had, or didn't have.

1 Great-grandpa _____ chickens and goats.
2 There _____ no computers in the 1920s.
3 My great-grandpa _____ four brothers.
4 My great-grandpa _____ electricity until he was thirteen.
5 Life _____ very different in the 1920s.

C Now write a few sentences yourself.

In the 1920s, people had _____ Most people didn't have _____

Unit 3 Harley Ate All the Sweets 25

Practice the Writing

1 Have students read the writing passage aloud. See if they can add anything to the chart after reading the passage.

2 Read the Writing Tips for a Descriptive Account aloud, then ask students to read the writing passage again, this time silently. Which of the writing tips did the author use and where were they used?

3 After the reading, explain and assign Exercise A. Be sure that students know what each term means, then check the exercise in class.

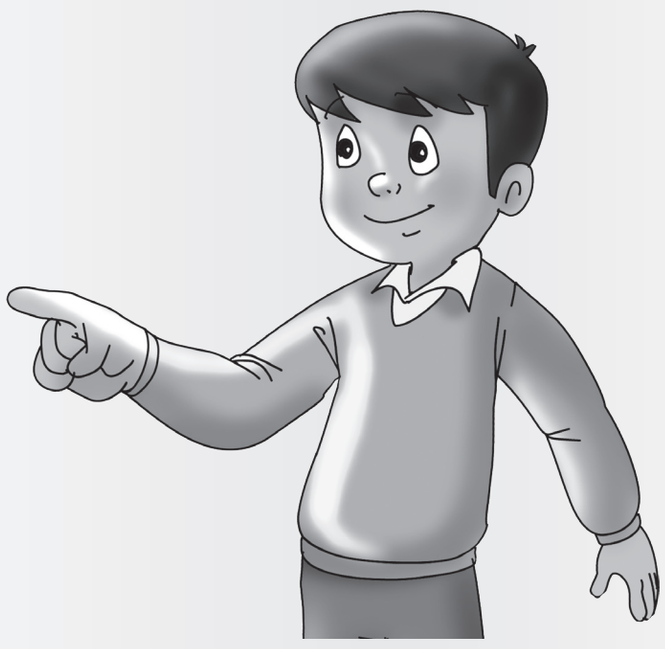
Finish the Lesson

1 Explain the other exercises, B and C, and assign them for homework or class work. Exercises A, B and C can also be used for a short assessment to see if students understand the writing concepts.

Give students time to share some of their responses for Exercise C.

Warm-up and Review

1 Have students note the yellow banner at the top of the page that says, "Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?" Take a few minutes to talk about capitalization, and check to be sure that students are forming the capital letters correctly. Have students find and point to each of the different types of end punctuation.



Introduce the Activities

1 Play the CD of the vocabulary words again, and have students repeat, pointing to each word and trying to say each word correctly. Explain and assign Exercises A and B on the activities pages. They can be done for homework or class work, but when students are finished, review the exercises and answers for assessment and reinforcement.

2 Review the grammar chart by writing one on the board that has some of the information but is blank in other parts. See if students can complete it together. Ask students to read sentences #1-5 under the paragraph. Have students notice the picture for exercise C and play the CD for the reading of that exercise as students follow along in their books. Monitor to see if students are able to keep up with the reading on the CD. Give students some time after the reading to write their answers for each sentence.

3 Play the CD again and let students listen for the answers that they don't yet know. Check for understanding at the end. If needed, a small group of students could listen to the CD a third time if needed. As the students progress, however, encourage them to work on being able to understand the reading after listening to it only one or two times.

Practice the Activities

1 Explain and assign Exercise D, and have students complete the dialogs. Once students are finished, have students read the dialogs aloud in groups. Once they have practiced the dialogs once, then have them ask "did have" and "had" questions about each other. This same drill can be done with Exercise F.

2 Assign the remaining exercises. Exercise E can be extended by the teacher or students bringing in pictures and asking questions about what the different people in the pictures have.

Additional Practice

1 Right 4 Workbook pages 15-20 can be assigned page by page as the Class Book page that corresponds to the workbook page is completed, or these workbook pages can be assigned as a unit, to be done before students begin the next unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 To finish the lesson and also drill the vocabulary and grammar points toward mastery, divide students into groups and give each child a flashcard with a vocabulary word on it. Have one student be "it." The other students show "it" their cards for a few seconds, then they hide the cards. "It" then tries to remember what each person had. This can be used to practice several different structures, so below are several examples of patterns the dialogs could follow. Pick one for students to use, and if desired, the students could change and use a different pattern to give them ample practice.

S1: What did she have?
S2: S/he had a pen.

S1: Did she have a pen?
S2: Yes, she had a pen.

S1: S/he didn't have a pen, s/he had a pencil.
S2: No, she didn't have a pen OR
Yes, she had a pencil.

After students are done with each of the activities on the activity page, check their answers and review as necessary.

4 Joy Makes a Friend

Conversation and Vocabulary

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of comparative and superlative adjectives.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and grammar point of comparative and superlative adjectives.

Materials needed: flashcards for Unit 3 and Unit 4, Class Book, flip book, and CD, a set of cards with definitions and/or clues for each vocabulary item

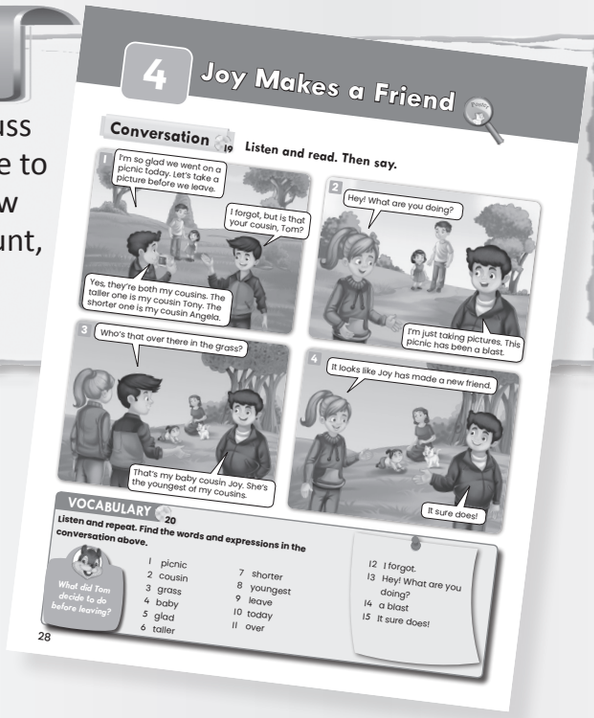
Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Bring the flip chart out with Unit 3's conversation. See if one or two students can summarize what is happening in each picture. If any student was absent the last week, it is good to use this same activity to let them know what is happening in the conversation. In the same way, students can read and define each vocabulary word for any students who might have missed them. This can also be done whenever a student is absent and needs to be caught up. It is a fun way to review, since the students get to be the "teacher," and the students who were absent feel included and can participate in class that day because they know the information.

Introduce the Conversation

1 Write the word "picnic" on the board and discuss what a picnic is like. Ask students what they like to do for picnics, and where they like to go. Review the family members—sister, brother, cousin, aunt, uncle, grandfather and grandmother.



Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. As needed, play the conversation a second time and let students open their books and follow along. If students are having a difficult time with the skill of listening, reverse these activities and have students listen to the CD with their books open first, then close their books and listen a second time. When the Class Books are open, watch to see if students can follow along with the CD.

2 Choose three students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Some question ideas are as follows:

a (Box 1) What does Tom want to do before he leaves?
b (Box 2) Does Tom like the picnic?
c (Box 3) Who is Joy?

d. (Box 4) What kind of "friend" has Joy made?

3 Have students work in threes, preferably two boys and one girl. Have each group read the conversation aloud, then try reading just one line of the conversation to see if either of the other students can give the next line.

4 If students seem confident with the conversation, have them change one of the lines in each box and read it again. Note that other changes may have to be made to allow for the first change. Some ideas for changes:

a. "Is that your cousin, Tom?" Becomes, "Is that your friend, Tom?" Then Tom must answer "No, they're both my cousins."
b. Change "a blast" to a synonym: really fun, great, a lot of fun, or a similar phrase.
c. Have Joy be younger than Angela (but not the youngest one of all).
d. Say something different about Joy: e.g., It looks like Joy likes to crawl, or It looks like Joy wants to play, etc.

Games and Activities

1 Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. Have students identify who/what is taller or shorter in each picture. Some possibilities would be the cousins, Helen and Tom, the trees, or Joy and her mom.

2 Have students tell about each picture on the flip chart, using the vocabulary as much as possible. Students can also act out one of the boxes of the conversation at this time, and other students guess which number box it is (Include Helen each time so it's not so obvious which box it is).

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question and discuss it with the students. Ask students if they enjoy taking pictures. Encourage students to bring in picture that they've taken to share with the class. The pictures can then be used to encourage conversation in the classroom. Ask students questions about their pictures and allow them to tell about them. Other students can ask questions, too.

2 Have students write four things that happen in the conversation. Ask them to number each sentence and list the events in chronological (time) order.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Hide the flashcards from Unit 3 around the room. Let students move around the room and try to find as many as they can. When one student finds one, s/he says, "Freeze!" and the students must freeze. That student then reads the card and calls on someone to give a definition. Then the search continues until all 16 (if phrases are included) cards are found. Note: It is a good idea with an activity like this to make a "map" of where the flashcards are in the classroom. Then if students have trouble finding some of them, you can give them "hotter" or "colder" clues to find the cards ("hotter" means they're getting closer, "colder" means they're getting farther).

Introduce Vocabulary

1 Have students look at each of the vocabulary words and phrases and try to sound them out or say them from recognition. Model the pronunciation as necessary. After each student reads a word, have the class repeat the word.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Ask one student at a time to read the sentence from the conversation where the word is used (there may be more than one word per sentence; simply read the sentence whenever one of its vocabulary words is being said).

2 Say various different vocabulary words and phrases aloud and see if students can find the word or phrase. The teacher can do the same with definitions.

Games and Activities

1 Have students sit in a circle, and give each student a flashcard. One student is "it" and walks around the outside of the circle, just like in Duck, Duck, Goose. "It" touches each student's head in turn and calls out a vocabulary word. When a student has the card that is called when their head is touched, the student leaves his/her spot and tries to beat "it" around the circle to the empty spot. In all other ways, the rules are the same as "duck, duck, goose." Whoever gets back to the spot first stays in the spot, and the other student is "It."

2 Running dictation: The teacher posts around the room numbered cards of sentences with vocabulary words and phrases in them. Have students work in pairs or groups (if the class size is large, groups would be better). One student is the runner, and the other students are recorders. Each group is given a number. The runner must find the card with that number on it, then s/he moves quickly back and forth from the card to the recorders, telling them the sentence in parts so they can record it correctly. Recorders can then read their sentences aloud to check for accuracy. Punctuation and spelling must be correct.

Finish the Lesson

1 At this point, the workbook page 21 could be assigned to check for student understanding and for extra practice. Pronunciation practice can be done by playing the CD again, one word at at time. Students do the six-second drill, where they hear the vocabulary item, then they say it three times in a row to a clapping rhythm then they say, "finished!" The same thing can be done with the conversation, but stop the CD after each sentence or so.

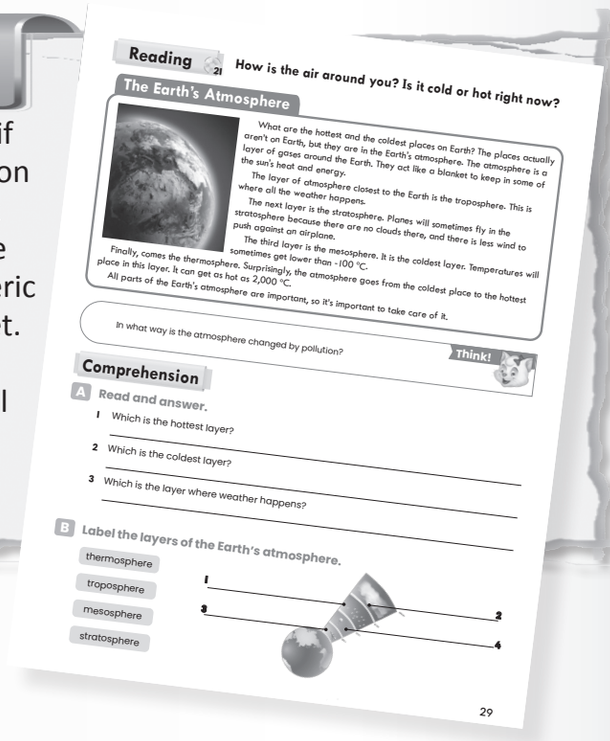
Introduce the Reading

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure comparative and superlative forms, and developing skills on writing a report of information.
Materials needed: Class Book, and CD, a list of adjectives the teacher feels comfortable making into comparative and superlative forms and using in a sentence (can be taken from the Word List at the back of the workbook), an arrow or other pointer a student can use for the grammar game #, and several sets of cards, on word on each card, that when the words in one set are put in the correct order will form a comparative or superlative sentence, objects as available that can easily be compared (e.g., two sizes of pencils for bigger/smaller or longer/shorter, a rock and a feather for heavier/lighter).

Introduce the Reading

1 Begin drawing the Earth on the board and see if students can guess what you're drawing. As soon as they guess correctly, let them know, and ask them what else should be added. See if anyone mentions the atmosphere. Draw the atmospheric layers above the Earth, but don't label them yet.

2 Tell students that in the reading today, they will learn how to label the different parts of the atmosphere, and what each one is like.



Reading 21 How is the air around you? Is it cold or hot right now?

The Earth's Atmosphere

What are the hottest and the coldest places on Earth? The places actually aren't on Earth, but they are in the Earth's atmosphere. The atmosphere is a layer of gases around the Earth. They act like a blanket to keep in some of the sun's heat and energy.

The layer of atmosphere closest to the Earth is the troposphere. This is where all the weather happens.

The next layer is the stratosphere. Planes will sometimes fly in the stratosphere because there are no clouds there, and there is less wind to push against an airplane.

The third layer is the mesosphere. It is the coldest layer. Temperatures will sometimes get lower than -100 °C.

Finally, comes the thermosphere. Surprisingly, the atmosphere goes from the coldest place to the hottest place in this layer. It can get as hot as 2,000 °C.

All parts of the Earth's atmosphere are important, so it's important to take care of it.

In what way is the atmosphere changed by pollution? Think!

Comprehension

A Read and answer.

1 Which is the hottest layer?

2 Which is the coldest layer?

3 Which is the layer where weather happens?

B Label the layers of the Earth's atmosphere.

thermosphere
troposphere

Listen to the Reading

1 The readings will get a little more difficult and/or detailed from this point, so the teacher might want to first have students listen to the CD with Class Books open. Students should point to the sentences as they're being read. Next, have students close their books and listen to the reading.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. See if students can add to the drawing of the Earth that is on the board. Have students complete Exercise A and check their answers. This is also a good way to assess student understanding of the reading. Refer to the diagram at the right of Exercise A.

Practice the Reading

1 Read the story aloud, having different students take turns reading. Encourage students to practice their pronunciation, based on what they heard on the CD. For the longer words, show students how to break them into syllables. Practice the /sf/ blend before trying the word "sphere."

2 Practice "tag team reading" to practice the flow of sentences. The teacher reads one sentence "chunk," usually a clause or one part of a compound sentence. S/he then draws out his/her voice a little to let students know there is more to come, and s/he motions for the class to finish the sentence. For example, the first sentence could be read like this:

T: What are the hottest (motions to class)
S: (Students read) …and the coldest places on Earth?
For shorter sentences, read the whole sentence, then the class reads the next sentence.

3 Assign Exercise B and check. Show some examples of other words with these word parts, such as thermometer, Mesozoic era, tropophyte, tropism, stratus clouds, stratified, or thermal energy. The focus should not be on memorizing what these words mean, but on showing how the meaning of the combining forms affects the meaning of the word. For thermometer, for example, therm- means heat and meter means a measure of, so the word means a measure of heat.

Finish the Lesson

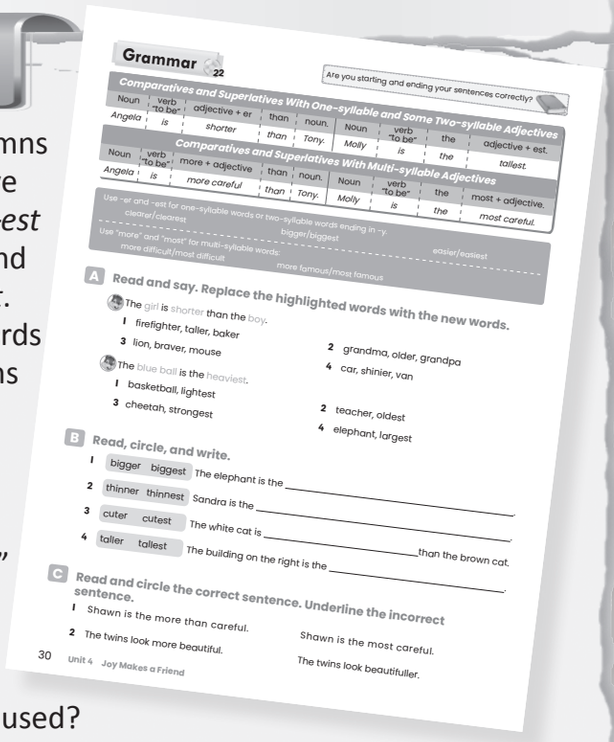
1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. This would be a good time to bring in newspaper or magazine articles about the atmosphere, if they're available. Students could discuss the articles or talk about how pollution can be reduced around the Earth.

Introduce the Grammar

1 Make a list of words on the board in two columns or groups. In one group, put many comparative and superlative adjectives that have –er and –est endings. In another group, put comparative and superlative adjectives that use more and most. See if students can take a close look at the words and figure out a pattern (try to keep exceptions to a minimum on the examples).

2 See if students can find any comparative or superlative forms in the reading. See if they can label them "comparative" or "superlative." When is each one used?

3 Also find the comparative and superlative forms in the conversation. How are the forms used?



Grammar 22

1 Shawn is the more than careful. Shawn is the most careful.
2 The twins look more beautiful. The twins look beautifuller.

30 Unit 4 Joy Makes a Friend

Practice the Grammar

1 Point out the reminder yellow banner at the top of the page that says, "Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?" Tell students that most exercises will not have a period at the end, and they will have to supply the end mark when they write sentences. Have students check the sentences in the grammar chart for end marks. What kinds of end marks do they have? Note that this reminder will only be in the first half of the Class Book, then students will need to remember on their own about end punctuation.

2 Explain and review the grammar chart with the students. Note how the sentence structure is different between the comparative and superlative. Look at the Bebo box at the bottom. If the word list at the back of the workbook is available, use that to find some adjectives to try making comparative forms with. Make two columns on the board, one for comparative and one for superlative. Put various adjectives in the proper columns on the chart, with the correct forms –er. -est or more/most.

3 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. For extra practice, students can change the comparative sentences to superlative ones and superlative ones to comparative.

4 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, giving students time to write down the answers for each number. Ask different students to read the finished sentence aloud. As an extension, students could take the same sentences but substitute other adjectives in the blanks. The same can be done for Exercise C. For the word lists done in number two, see if students can make sentences for some of the words.

Games and Activities

1 Name an adjective in its comparative or superlative form. Then call on 2-3 students to come to the front of the room to show the adjective. For example, if the teacher says, "shorter," call on two students. Those students would go to the front of the class. One student would use the pointer to point to him/herself, then that student would bend, squat or kneel to become shorter than the other student (or if one is noticeably shorter, the students could simply stand together and point to the shorter one. Finally, see if students can make a sentence about the "living picture" in the front of the classroom (e.g., Jane is shorter than Marcy.).

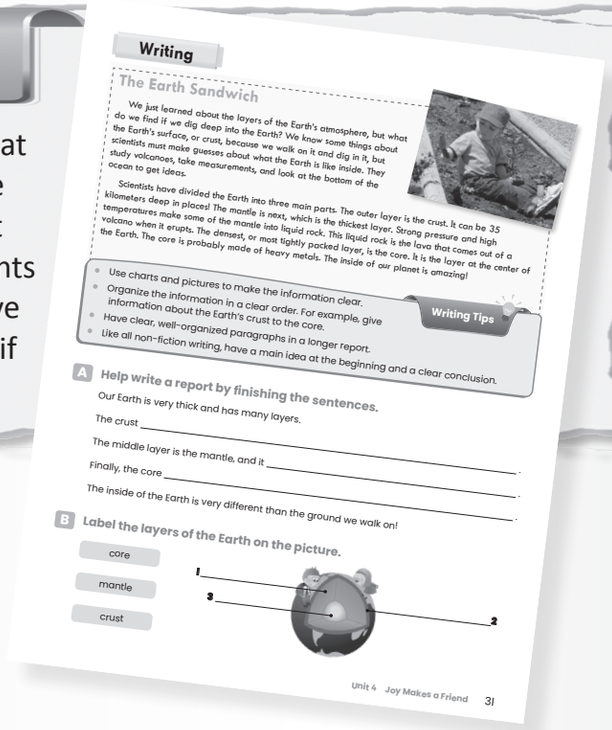
2 Take out prepared cards that are grouped into sentences. Each card should have one word from a comparative or superlative sentence. Hand out the cards for one sentence, one to each of several students. Those students with cards come to the front of the class and put themselves in order. When they have made their sentence and you have checked it, each student reads his word aloud, in order. Repeat this activity several times, each time with a different sentence.

Finish the Lesson

1 Write a comparative or superlative sentence on the board and have students show "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" about the sentence. Review grammar chart as needed. Some of the workbook pages 23-25 could be assigned at this time if desired, for further practice with the grammar point and/or informal assessment.

Introduce the Writing

1 Ask students to think of a part of the Earth that hasn't been talked about yet. As needed, give some clues and see if students can guess that one part is the center of the Earth. Ask students what they know about the Earth's center. Have students notice the title and the picture. See if they can come up with the reason for each.



Writing

The Earth Sandwich

We just learned about the layers of the Earth's atmosphere, but what do we find if we dig deep into the Earth? We know some things about the Earth's surface, or crust, because we walk on it and dig in it, but scientists must make guesses about what the Earth is like inside. They study volcanoes, take measurements, and look at the bottom of the ocean to get ideas.

Scientists have divided the Earth into three main parts. The outer layer is the crust. It can be 35 kilometers deep in places! The mantle is next, which is the thickest layer. Strong pressure and high temperatures make some of the mantle into liquid rock. This liquid rock is the lava that comes out of a volcano when it erupts. The densest, or most tightly packed layer, is the core. It is the layer at the center of the Earth. The core is probably made of heavy metals. The inside of our planet is amazing!

Writing Tips

- Use charts and pictures to make the information clear.
- Organize the information in a clear order. For example, give information about the Earth's crust to the core.
- Have clear, well-organized paragraphs in a longer report.
- Like all non-fiction writing, have a main idea at the beginning and a clear conclusion.

A Help write a report by finishing the sentences.

Our Earth is very thick and has many layers.

The crust _____.

The middle layer is the mantle, and it _____.

Finally, the core _____.

The inside of the Earth is very different than the ground we walk on!

B Label the layers of the Earth on the picture.

Practice the Writing

1 Choose various students to read the writing passage aloud, a few sentences or a paragraph at a time. After reading the passage, see if students can better see why the passage is titled "The Earth Sandwich." Have students note the comparative and superlative forms in the passage. Why did the author choose those forms in each sentence?

2 Read the Writing Tips together as a class. Which of the tips are used in the writing passage? How can the reader tell that the passage is a report of information?

3 Explain Exercise A, and have students complete the exercise. When all students have finished, ask one child to read it aloud to the class. Also explain Exercise

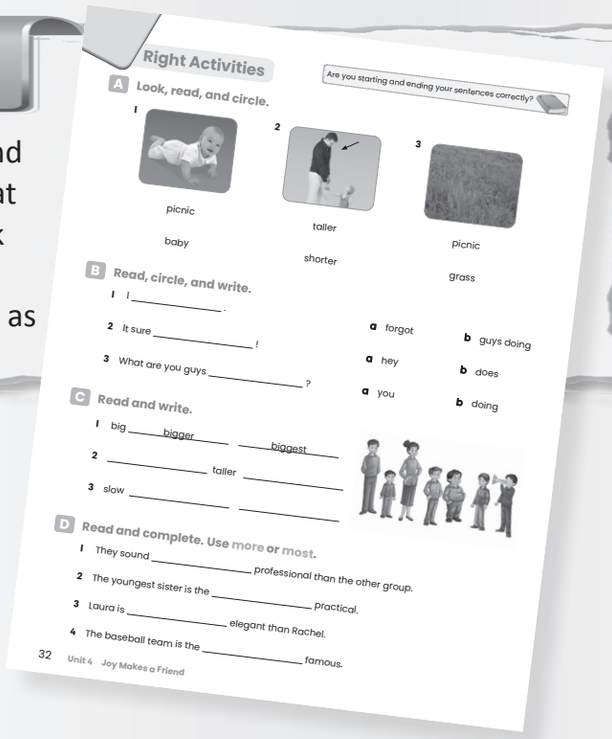
B. Depending on students' abilities, either assign the chart and the writing for Exercise B for homework, or have students complete the exercise in class while the teacher monitors and offers help with phrasing sentences, keeping the information accurate and in order, etc. Have students check for correct spelling and end punctuation.

Finish the Lesson

1 Allow time for students to share their writing. Since this is the students' first paragraph writing assignment, some extra help may be needed, and the teacher will want to give lots of positive feedback to make it an enjoyable experience for the writers.

Warm-up and Review

1 This is the perfect time for students to drill and practice any vocabulary or grammar point that they do not seem confident in. The workbook pages and/or games from the introduction to the Teacher's Book could be used at this time as needed.



Right Activities

1 They sound _____ professional than the other group.

2 The youngest sister is the _____ practical.

3 Laura is _____ elegant than Rachel.

4 The baseball team is the _____ famous.

32 Unit 4 Joy Makes a Friend

Introduce the Activities

1 Bring out 2-3 objects at a time and have students compare them, using a sentence in the comparative or superlative. For example, if the teacher shows three lengths of rulers, students could say, "The blue ruler is the shortest of all." Make a point to use taller, shorter, youngest and a form of glad in the examples, since these are vocabulary words.

Practice the Activities

1 In Exercise A, have students read the words under each picture, then ask them to circle the word that describes each picture. Do the same for Exercise B, but this time choosing the correct letter, a or b. Check student's answers to see if they know and understand the vocabulary items.

2 Ask students to look at the pictures for Exercise C. Talk about them, referring to each person by where they are in line or their colors of clothes. Then ask students to complete each number with the simple adjective and its comparative and superlative forms. All the adjectives in Exercise C will use the endings –er or –est.

3 Do a similar activity with exercise D, but here each adjective uses more or most to make the comparative and superlative forms. Students must choose the correct word based on how many things are being compared. Ask different students in the class to read the completed sentences.

4 Exercise E might take a little extra concentration on the part of the students. Encourage students to draw a picture to help them picture each of the different people. Then have students mark the boxes with ✔ or ✘. Check students' responses. Remember, the Activities Pages can be used as an informal assessment to see how well students understand the material.

5 Ask students to carefully note the directions for Exercise F. First, have students read the simple and comparative forms of the adjective on the right. Then students write the opposite of the adjective given, including the correct form. Check student answers carefully, and see if students can give the superlative form of each adjective. Can students use some of the adjectives in sentences?

6 Finally, have students read the directions and the words for Exercise G. Students close their books and listen as the teacher plays the CD for this exercise. Students may then open their books and mark any answer(s) they remember. Next, have students listen to the CD again, this time with books open. Again, check student answers to see if they are understanding as they listen.

Additional Practice

1 The workbook pages that correspond with this unit are pages 21-26. These can be assigned as a whole, to be completed before students begin the next unit, or individually as the corresponding unit pages are assigned. There are also many activities and games listed in the introduction to the Teacher's Book. Many of these can be used as drills and extra practice.

Finish the Lesson

1 An enjoyable way to end the lesson is to have students come up as a class (if the class is small) or as a small group (if the class is large). Tell the students to line up in different ways—from shortest to tallest, from youngest to oldest, etc. After each line is formed, talk about who is _____ (older, younger, etc.) than whom. This can be done several times with different adjectives.

5 Under the Weather

Conversation and Vocabulary

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of the structure and use of prepositional phrases.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and the new grammar point.

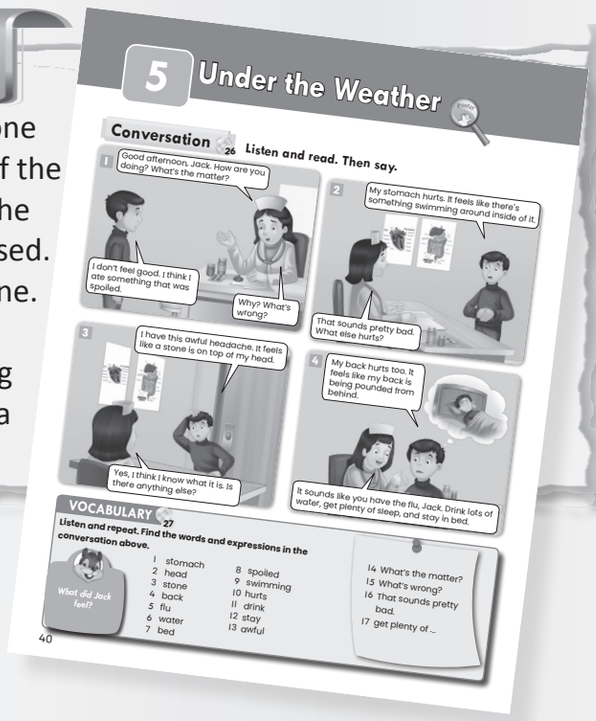
Materials needed: flashcards for Unit 5, Class Book, flip book, and CD, a set of cards with definitions and/or clues for each vocabulary item, BINGO cards and markers, a version of the conversation with blanks for students to complete (make one copy for each student in the class), a code for letters of the alphabet

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Have the class or groups get into a circle. Give one student a ball. That student must say one line of the conversation from unit 4, then toss the ball to the next student. The line can be exact or paraphrased. Continue until all the conversation has been done. If students cannot recall it very well, the game could be done several times, with the goal being able to finish the conversation without making a mistake.



5 Under the Weather

Conversation 26 Listen and read. Then say.

1 Good afternoon, Jack. How are you doing? What's the matter?
I don't feel good. I think I ate something that was spoiled.
2 My stomach hurts. It feels like there's something swimming around inside of it.
Why? What's wrong?
That sounds pretty bad. What else hurts?
3 I have this awful headache. It feels like a stone is on top of my head.
4 My back hurts too. It feels like my back is being pounded from behind.
Yes, I think I know what it is. Is there anything else?
It sounds like you have the flu, Jack. Drink lots of water, get plenty of sleep, and stay in bed.

VOCABULARY 27
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.
What did Jack feel?
1 stomach 2 head 3 stone 4 back 5 flu 6 water 7 bed 8 spoiled 9 swimming 10 hurts 11 drink 12 stay 13 awful 14 What's the matter? 15 What's wrong? 16 That sounds pretty bad. 17 get plenty of ...
40

Introduce the Conversation

1 Ask students if they have been sick recently, and ask them to tell about how they felt. What did they do to get better? Did they go to a doctor's office? Talk about how being able to tell how we feel or what hurts is very important. In the conversation, students will learn how to do that.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin the CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. As needed, play the conversation a second time and let students open their books and follow along. If students are having a difficult time with the skill of listening, reverse these activities and have students listen to the CD with their books open first, then close their books and listen a second time. When the Class Books are open, watch to see if students can follow along with the CD.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Some question ideas are as follows:

a (Box 1) Has Jack been to this doctor before? How do you know?

b (Box 2) What is wrong with Jack?

c (Box 3) Does the doctor have an idea of what's wrong with Jack?

d. (Box 4) What should Jack do to get better?

3 In pairs, have students say, paraphrase or read (depending on students' abilities) the conversation. Then ask the students to change their parts and do the conversation again.

4 If students seem confident with the conversation, have them change the things that are wrong with Jack. They would also need to change what the doctor says accordingly. This can be a good vocabulary builder to give students the words they need to tell how they feel when they're sick. A list of symptoms could be:

I'm very tired.
My _____ (practice different body parts) hurts.
I'm very sleepy.
I feel hot. /I have a fever.
My muscles ache.
It hurts right here.
I feel sick to my stomach.
I want to lie down.

Games and Activities

1 Use the flip chart to practice the conversation. A good vocabulary builder is to have students name the different people/items in the picture (this is also a good way to review the character's names in case there are new students that come in part way through the year). Also be sure, though, that you use the flip chart to encourage students in retelling and practicing the conversation. The pictures can be used to help students both in paraphrasing and memorizing the conversation.

2 Give students a re-typed copy of the conversation, but with some words or phrases left out. Students must complete the conversation, then read it aloud. This activity can easily be modified for classes or students of different levels because greater or lesser amounts can be left out, and students can be allowed to finish the conversation with their books open or directed to close their books.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question and discuss it with the students. See if students can name all three things that were wrong with Jack. This can also be a time to practice the list of symptoms listed for "Practice the Conversation" #3.

2 Divide students into groups. Have each student in the group draw a picture of one part of the conversation. The other students guess which part of the conversation is being drawn.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 The ball from #1 in the conversation section could also be used for practicing vocabulary. The teacher writes the words on the board, then students pass the ball around. Students must say the next word as soon as they receive the ball. Another way this activity could be done is to have one student give the definition for the word, then pass the ball. The receiver must then say the correct word.

2 Play the CD again for the words from Unit 4. Have students listen and repeat. This is also a good time for students to practice accent reduction.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 Review syllables if students haven't yet mastered them. Have students say and clap the vocabulary words and phrases. Do students notice that many of the words are one syllable? For extra practice, students could also clap out part of the conversation.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Ask one student at a time to read the sentence from the conversation where the word is used (there may be more than one word per sentence; simply read the sentence whenever one of the vocabulary words are being said).

2 Give a "spelling test" with the words. Pronounce each word carefully, then have students try to write the word from memory and/or by sounding it out. The goal is not for perfect spelling, but for students to practice writing and phonics. Many of the words in this unit can be sounded out well rather easily, so it is a good unit to begin this type of activity.

Games and Activities

1 Make a code for each letter of the alphabet, then write the vocabulary words in code. See if students can "break" the code and write the words correctly, or tell the students at least part of the code and have them write the words. This can also be done with the vocabulary phrases.

2 Hand out a BINGO card to each student, and ask students to write one vocabulary word per square. For shorter games, the boards could be 3 X 3; for longer games they could be 4 X 4, but phrases will need to be used as well in the latter case. Use the flash cards to call out the words for the game. The first student to get a full row, column or diagonal calls out "BINGO!" Students can also play "Blackout," which means they try to cover all the squares (but the number of squares on the BINGO card must be significantly different than the number of vocabulary words for "Blackout").

Finish the Lesson

1 At this point, the workbook page 27 could be assigned to check for student understanding and for extra practice. Make enough copies of the vocabulary/definition cards to hand out one per small group. Have students match the words, phrases and definitions as quickly as possible, to see which group can get them done the fastest. This can also be done with individual letters, with students putting the letters together to form the vocabulary words and/or phrases.

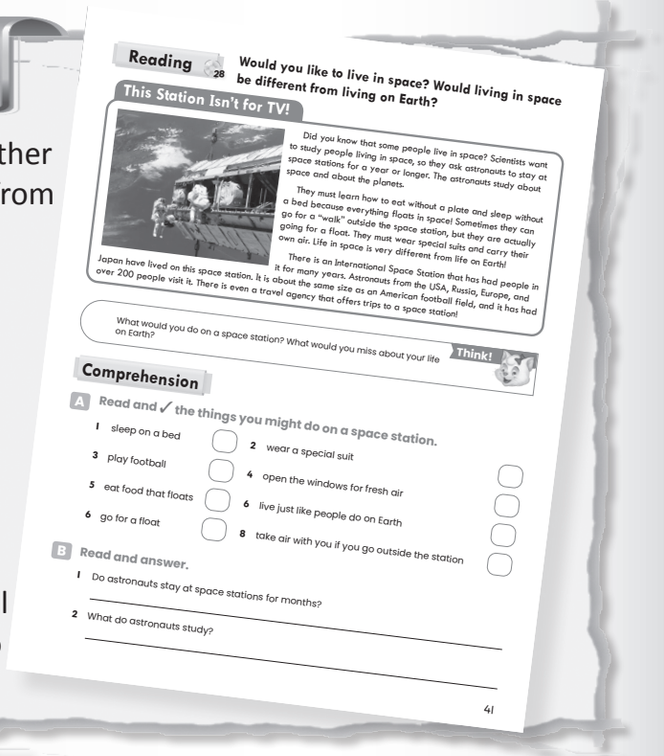
Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of prepositional phrases, and developing skills for writing a personal essay.
Materials needed: Class Book, and CD, internet access (optional), a list of at least thirty common prepositions, and different sentences from the reading written on separate sheets of paper

Introduce the Reading

1 Begin by asking students if they have lived in other places. How were those places alike/different from where they live now? Next talk about unusual places to live. What would it be like to live in space? Why do so many special arrangements need to be made for astronauts—how is space different from Earth? Have students make predictions about what life on a space station, and keep the predictions on the board to be used later.

2 Tell students that in the reading today, they will learn about space stations and what it is like to live on one.



Reading 28

Would you like to live in space? Would living in space be different from living on Earth?

This Station Isn't for TV!

Did you know that some people live in space? Scientists want to study people living in space, so they ask astronauts to stay at space stations for a year or longer. The astronauts study about space and about the planets.

They must learn how to eat without a plate and sleep without a bed because everything floats in space! Sometimes they can go for a "walk" outside the space station, but they are actually going for a float. They must wear special suits and carry their own air. Life in space is very different from life on Earth!

There is an International Space Station that has had people in it for many years. Astronauts from the USA, Russia, Europe, and Japan have lived on this space station. It is about the same size as an American football field, and it has had over 200 people visit it. There is even a travel agency that offers trips to a space station!

What would you do on a space station? What would you miss about your life on Earth?

Think!

Comprehension

A Read and ✓ the things you might do on a space station.

1 sleep on a bed
2 wear a special suit
3 play football
4 open the windows for fresh air
5 eat food that floats
6 live just like people do on Earth
6 go for a float
8 take air with you if you go outside the station

B Read and answer.

1 Do astronauts stay at space stations for months?

2 What do astronauts study?

Listen to the Reading

1 Depending on students' abilities, the teacher may want to have students keep their books open and follow along as the CD is played. Students can then close their books and simply listen to the CD a second time. This gives the students listening as well as reading practice.

2 Ask students to compare their predictions on the board with the information in the article. Which predictions were accurate, and which were inaccurate? Ask students why the think the quotations are around the word "walk," and explain that it is because the word is being used to mean something different than it normally does.

Practice the Reading

1 Read the story aloud, having different students take turns reading. Encourage students to practice their inflection and rhythm as they read. It can be good practice to read a sentence flat (with no inflection, then ask a student to add inflection to it.

2 With students working in groups, give each group a different sentence (or sentences, if the goal is to read the whole passage). Have the group practice reading the sentences, but with each student only saying one word at a time. Students can practice to make the sentence(s) flow as smoothly as possible, then they can go to the front of the room and "read" their sentence(s) as the other students follow in their books.

3 Assign Exercise A and B and check. Review and numbers the students weren't sure about, and have students give the correct answers for the "no" answers in Exercise B.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. Students can visit www.youtube.com/watch?v=-1OTSbIzcwI for a twenty-minute tour of the NASA space station, or www.youtube.com/watch?v=RyGoy for a shorter tour. Let students discuss what they think about life on a space station. Who would like to try living on a space station? Who is not interested?

42 Unit 5 Under the Weather

1 Make a list of prepositions on the board. Tell students that prepositions help to make connections in a sentence but not in the same way that conjunctions (and, but, since, then, etc.) connect. The list of prepositions is long, so it helps to tell students that many of the prepositions fall into the group of "what a cat can do in relationship to a house:" in a house, on a house, around a house, over a house, etc. Then list the common prepositions that don't follow this rule: with, during, of, from, etc.

2 Explain that prepositions almost always occur in prepositional phrases. A prepositional phrase starts with a preposition and ends with a noun. Give a few examples of prepositional phrases, such as by the park, with my friend, from Egypt.

Practice the Grammar

1 Have students look at the grammar chart and note the structure and use of prepositional phrases. What meaning does the example prepositional phrase add to the sentence? Refer to the list of prepositions on the board, but also have students note the Bebo box at the bottom of the page.

2 Have students make example prepositional phrases from the prepositions in the Bebo box, then make sentences from the prepositional phrases.

3 Do Exercise A out loud, calling on different students to read the sentence. As time allows, also ask students to draw a quick picture of where Lolo is for each sentence.

Games and Activities

1 Choose an object in the front of the classroom, then ask different students to come to the front of the classroom and put themselves somewhere in relationship to that object. The other students must then write a sentence using the correct prepositional phrase. For example, if the student goes under the table, the sentence could be, "Helen is hiding under the table."

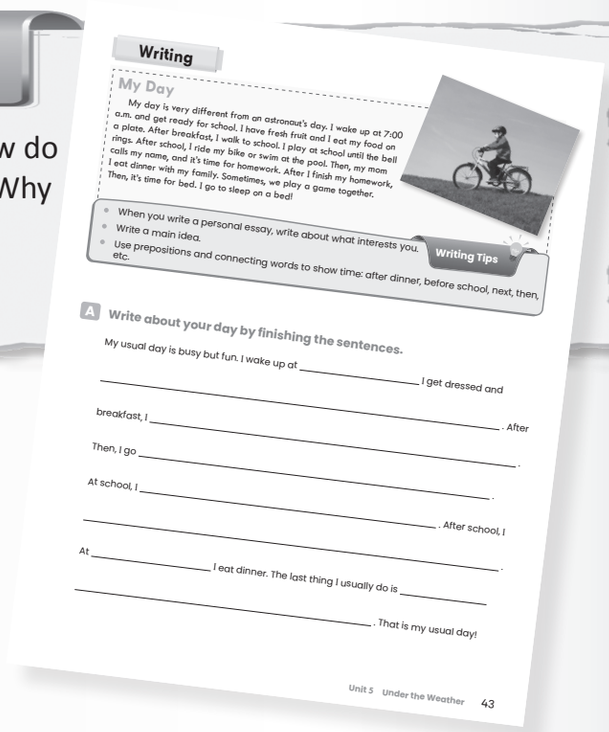
2 Give various students each one card with a different number under 10 on each one. Then ask students to come to the front of the room in numerical order and say a word that will go together in a sentence with the words that their classmates are giving. For example, the student with card #1 might say, "The", #2 could say "lion,", #3 might say "roars," #4 could say "at," #5 says "the," and #6 says "trainer." For more challenge and to include more students, ask the students to include all 9 people who have cards.

Finish the Lesson

1 Ask students to use their pencil, and have them show some of the prepositions with their pencil: on, under, above, in, etc. This gives students practice in learning the meanings of the prepositions, and it also gives the teacher an opportunity to assess how well the class knows the prepositions.

Introduce the Writing

1 Have students tell about their usual days. How do they think an astronaut spends his/her day? Why would it be different?



Writing

My Day

My day is very different from an astronaut's day. I wake up at 7:00 a.m. and get ready for school. I have fresh fruit and I eat my food on a plate. After breakfast, I walk to school. I play at school until the bell rings. After school, I ride my bike or swim at the pool. Then, my mom calls my name, and it's time for homework. After I finish my homework, I eat dinner with my family. Sometimes, we play a game together. Then, it's time for bed. I go to sleep on a bed!

Writing Tips

- When you write a personal essay, write about what interests you.
- Write a main idea.
- Use prepositions and connecting words to show time: after dinner, before school, next, then, etc.

A Write about your day by finishing the sentences.

My usual day is busy but fun. I wake up at _____ I get dressed and _____. After breakfast, I _____. Then, I go _____. At school, I _____. After school, I _____. At _____ I eat dinner. The last thing I usually do is _____. That is my usual day!

Unit 5 Under the Weather 43

Practice the Writing

1 Choose various students to read the writing passage aloud, a few sentences at a time. See if students can find some of the prepositional phrases in the passage. Can the students find the main idea sentence? Has the writer included details that tie in with the main idea?

2 Read the Writing Tips together as a class. Which of the tips are used in the writing passage? How can the reader tell that the passage is a personal essay?

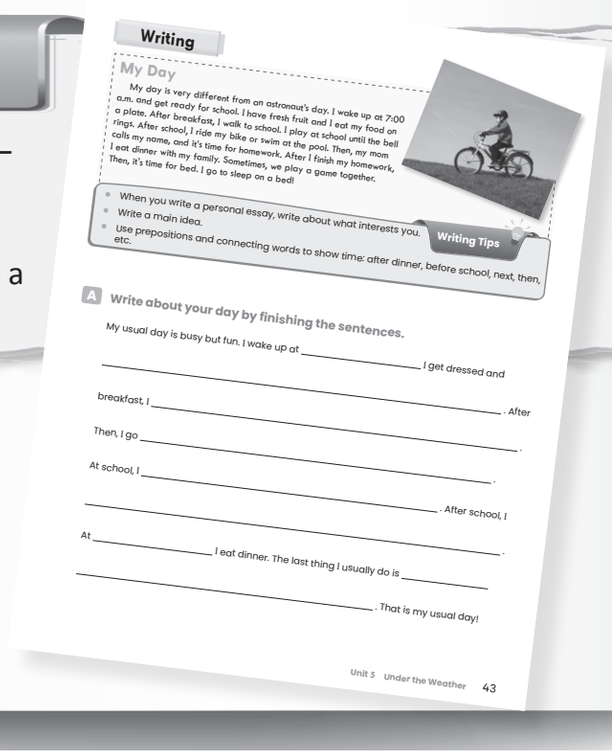
3 Explain Exercise A, and have students complete the exercise. Note how many of the prepositions help to show time or place. Also explain Exercise B. Depending on students' abilities, either assign the writing for Exercise B, or have students complete the exercise in class while the teacher monitors and offers help with phrasing, keeping the information accurate and in order, etc. Have students check for correct spelling and end punctuation. Ask students to find the words that helped to move the reader from one idea to the next (called transition words, these are words such as "then," "next," or some prepositional phrases such as "after school."

Finish the Lesson

1 Allow time for students to share their writing. Note how the transition words help to put the paragraph in order. Talk about which details made the paragraphs interesting.

Introduce the Activities

1 Write the vocabulary words that are nouns—stomach, head, stone, back, flu, water, and bed. Ask students to put each one into a prepositional phrase, then use the phrase in a sentence.



Writing

My Day

My day is very different from an astronaut's day. I wake up at 7:00 a.m. and get ready for school. I have fresh fruit and I eat my food on a plate. After breakfast, I walk to school. I play at school until the bell rings. After school, I ride my bike or swim at the pool. Then, my mom calls my name, and it's time for homework. After I finish my homework, I eat dinner with my family. Sometimes, we play a game together. Then, it's time for bed. I go to sleep on a bed!

Writing Tips

- When you write a personal essay, write about what interests you.
- Write a main idea.
- Use prepositions and connecting words to show time: after dinner, before school, next, then, etc.

A Write about your day by finishing the sentences.

My usual day is busy but fun. I wake up at _____ I get dressed and _____. After breakfast, I _____. Then, I go _____. At school, I _____. After school, I _____. At _____ I eat dinner. The last thing I usually do is _____. That is my usual day!

Unit 5 Under the Weather 43

Practice the Activities

1 Explain Exercise A and have students write the vocabulary word under each picture. By now, the goal is for students to do this without looking back at the vocabulary words. Also have students complete Exercise B and C. Have different students read the sentences aloud. For Exercise C the teacher could also ask a second student to answer the question that each vocabulary phrase is asking.

2 For Exercise D, allow the students to read the directions and the prepositional phrases first. Then have students close their books and listen to the CD once to understand the paragraph. Play the CD again, and this time have students clap each time they hear a prepositional phrase. Finally, let students open their books and complete the exercise according to the directions.

3 Explain Exercises E, F and G and have students complete the exercises. Students can check each other's books for exercise E, with teacher supervision. For Exercise F, check students' answers first, then see if students can make prepositional phrases and sentences for each preposition. Finally, check student sentences in Exercise G, noting especially if students have an upper case letter at the beginning of the sentence and a full stop at the end. Note that this is the first time the yellow reminder box has not been included it the unit, so an extra reminder is helpful at this time. Also, of course, check for accuracy with placement and structure of the prepositional phrase.

Additional Practice

1 The workbook pages that correspond with this unit are pages 27-32. These can be assigned as a whole, to be completed before students begin the next unit, or individually as the corresponding unit pages are assigned. There are also many activities and games listed in the introduction to the Teacher's Book. Many of these can be used as drills and extra practice.

Finish the Lesson

1 An enjoyable way to end the lesson is to have students stand up as a class (if the class is small) or as a small group (if the class is large). Tell the students to put themselves in different places as you call out a preposition. Then use spatial prepositions and see if students can put themselves in the right place (it could be in relationship with their desk).

6 Ready For School?

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of should+ verb in context.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and grammar point of should + verb.

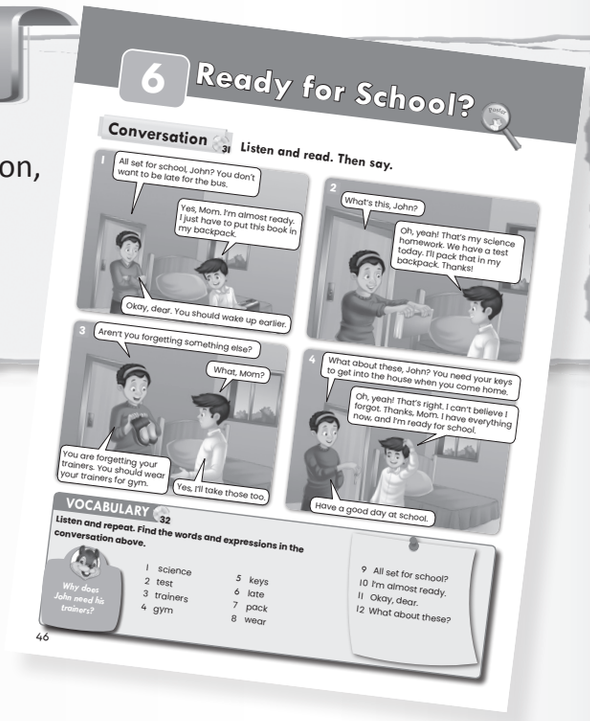
Materials needed: flashcards, Class Book, flip book, CD and CD player

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Write the Unit 5 vocabulary on the board, and have students summarize the Unit 5 conversation, using as many of the vocabulary words as possible. For fun, students could form teams and earn a point for each vocabulary item they use correctly in summarizing the conversation.



6 Ready for School?

Conversation 31 Listen and read. Then say.

1 All set for school, John? You don't want to be late for the bus.
Yes, Mom. I'm almost ready. I just have to put this book in my backpack.
Okay, dear. You should wake up earlier.

2 What's this, John?
Oh, yeah! That's my science homework. We have a test today. I'll pack that in my backpack. Thanks!

3 Aren't you forgetting something else?
What, Mom?
You are forgetting your trainers. You should wear your trainers for gym.
Yes, I'll take those too.

4 What about these, John? You need your keys to get into the house when you come home.
Oh, yeah! That's right. I can't believe I forgot. Thanks, Mom. I have everything now, and I'm ready for school.
Have a good day at school.

VOCABULARY 32
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.
Why does John need his trainers?
1 science 2 test 3 trainers 4 gym 5 keys 6 late 7 pack 8 wear
9 All set for school? 10 I'm almost ready. 11 Okay, dear. 12 What about these?

Introduce the Conversation

1 Identify the characters in the conversation. Have students read the title, look at the pictures, and predict what might happen in the conversation. Talk about how different students study. How many hours do different students study? Do they study late at night or in the afternoon?

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is read. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Some question ideas are as follows:

a (Box 1) What is John doing?
b (Box 2) Has John remembered everything?
c (Box 3) What does John need for gym?
d (Box 4) Who is good at remembering things?

3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 Choose two students to come up to the front and act out the conversation. If possible, use props.

Games and Activities

1 Close books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, have students come up and tell what is happening in the picture. If they are able, have two students come up at a time to paraphrase the conversation.

2 As time allows, have students do a short skit about how they wake up in the morning. Then have another student describe what the actor did.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. An alternate activity with the Bebo question is to have each student write down what they think the answer is, then the teacher walks around to check the responses. Some students may want to share their ideas.

2 Have students fold a sheet of paper into four parts. With books closed, see if students can write what happened in conversation box. They can write what each person said, or they can tell about each box with a full sentence or two. Students should not focus on remembering the exact words but on the main idea of each box.

Box 1: Mom asks John if he's ready for school and John thinks he is.

Box 2: Mom finds John's science homework that he's forgotten.

Box 3: John has also forgotten his gym sneakers.
Box 4: Mom finds another thing that John has forgotten, but now he is finally ready for school.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Write some review words from Right 1-5 on the board. Have students read and practice the words. Some ideas for words are as follows:

buildings	machines	learn	clean
Australia	kangaroos	visit	Japan
birthday	wonderful	delicious	gifts picnic	youngest	cousin	over stomach	spoiled	hurts	awful

2 See if students can give a definition for and use each one in a sentence. Talk about the parts of speech for some of the words, and point out unique features of words, such as a compound word [birthday], ends in -s [buildings, hurts . . . }, etc.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You would call out the number, and the students would choose that number.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Give each student a flashcard. When you or a student you choose says the word a student has, they must stand, show and say their word. Change words 2-3 times as time allows.

2 Play Wheel of Fortune with the vocabulary words. Students take turns choosing a word and going to the board to write lines for each letter in the word. Then students guess a letter. If the letter is in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter in the correct place. If it isn't in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter on the board. That letter counts as a minus point. After five points, the "teacher" is declared the winner and can give the answer. Then see if a student can use that word in a sentence.

Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of "should" in a verb phrase, and developing skills for preparing an interview.

Materials needed: Class Book, CD and CD player, cards with three vocabulary items on each card, gardening tools as available, examples of miniature things as available (note: if the teacher or a student has access to a bonsai plant, it would be an excellent visual aid for the writing passage), a copy of the class rules that is easily visible to students.

Finish the Lesson

1 Describe five different vocabulary words and three phrases (see example descriptions below). Have students write down which words they think you are describing. Check the students' work for accuracy. Are most of the students learning the words? If not, do some extra practice and/or the first workbook page, page 33 to practice vocabulary some more.

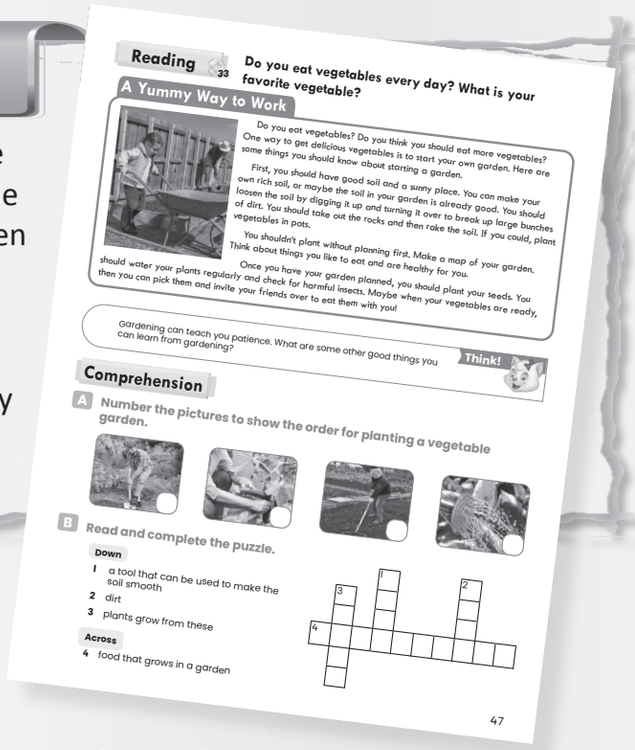
Examples: 1. This word has two syllables and is a noun. A house, store and office can be examples of this word. Robots might make these in the future. Answer: buildings

2 This word tells what you can do with a car. It rhymes with "hive," and it is a verb. Answer: drive.

Introduce the Reading

1 Show the gardening tools and/or plants to the students (if they're not available, bring in some pictures). Ask students what they think of when they see these things.

2 Have students talk about the picture in the reading and make predictions about what they think it is. Explain that today's reading will be about gardening.



Reading 33

Do you eat vegetables every day? What is your favorite vegetable?

A Yummy Way to Work

Do you eat vegetables? Do you think you should eat more vegetables? One way to get delicious vegetables is to start your own garden. Here are some things you should know about starting a garden.

First, you should have good soil and a sunny place. You can make your own rich soil, or maybe the soil in your garden is already good. You should loosen the soil by digging it up and turning it over to break up large bunches of dirt. You should take out the rocks and then rake the soil. If you could, plant vegetables in pots.

You shouldn't plant without planning first. Make a map of your garden. Think about things you like to eat and are healthy for you.

Once you have your garden planned, you should plant your seeds. You should water your plants regularly and check for harmful insects. Maybe when your vegetables are ready, then you can pick them and invite your friends over to eat them with you!

Gardening can teach you patience. What are some other good things you can learn from gardening?

Think!

Comprehension

A Number the pictures to show the order for planting a vegetable garden.

B Read and complete the puzzle.

Down
1 a tool that can be used to make the soil smooth
2 dirt
3 Plants grow from these

Across
4 food that grows in a garden

47

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books and listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Talk a little about the order in which things happen in order to prepare students for Exercise A.

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Explain Exercise A and have students complete the exercise. Check student's answers during class time. This is a good time to review the ordinal numbers first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth.

3 Also assign Exercise B at this time. Be sure students know the words "Across" and "Down" and understand the concept of a crossword puzzle.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. If students have a difficult time thinking of an answer, write some of the characteristics of gardening to give students clues to what they might learn.

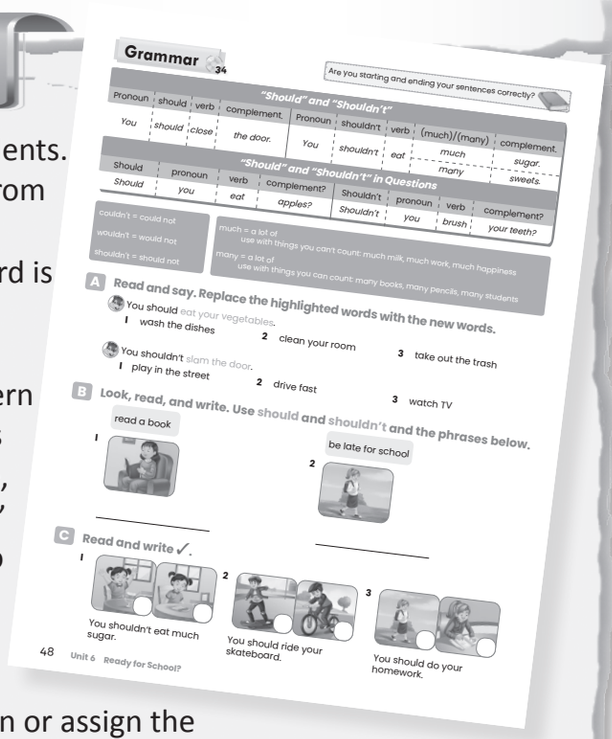
Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write a sentence from the reading that uses "should" in a verb phrase. Write the same sentence in present tense. Talk about the difference in meaning between the two sentences. Ask students when they would use "should" as a modal verb.

2 See if students can find any other sentences that use "should" in the reading. Talk about their meaning, and compare this form with the same sentence in the simple present tense.

3 Write a present tense sentence and a present tense question on the board, such as "The doctor sees new patients." Can students change the sentence to one that has the modal verb "should?" Write the newly-formed sentence on the board: The doctor should see new patients." How does the verb change?

Practice the Grammar



Grammar 34

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

"Should" and "Shouldn't"

Pronoun	should	verb	complement.
You	should	close	the door.

Pronoun	shouldn't	verb	(much)/(many)	complement.
You	shouldn't	eat	much	sugar.
			many	sweets.

"Should" and "Shouldn't" in Questions

Should	pronoun	verb	complement?
Should	you	eat	apples?

Shouldn't	pronoun	verb	complement?
Shouldn't	you	brush	your teeth?

couldn't = could not wouldn't = would not shouldn't = should not much = a lot of use with things you can't count: much milk, much work, much happiness many = a lot of use with things you can count: many books, many pencils, many students

A Read and say. Replace the highlighted words with the new words.

You should eat your vegetables.
1 wash the dishes 2 clean your room 3 take out the trash

You shouldn't slam the door.
1 play in the street 2 drive fast 3 watch TV

B Look, read, and write. Use should and shouldn't and the phrases below.

read a book
1 be late for school
2

C Read and write ✓.

1 You shouldn't eat much sugar.
2 You should ride your skateboard.
3 You should do your homework.

48 Unit 6 Ready for School?

1 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question. Also note the structure of the sentence when a question word is used.

2 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. For further practice, have students change the modal verb "should" to "shouldn't" in the first pattern, then back to "should" in the second pattern.

3 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, then either give students time to write the sentences down or assign the sentences for homework. The same can be done for Exercise C. Review the information in the Bebo boxes at the bottom of the page, especially "much" and "many." Also at this time, clarify the difference between "should" and "shall."

Games and Activities

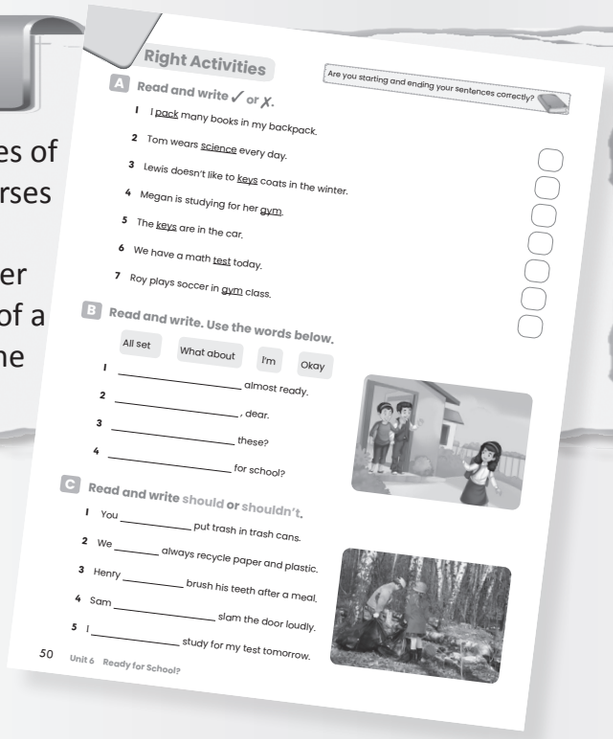
1 Show students a tray of classroom objects for a set period of time. If there are 15 objects, 30 seconds is a good amount of time. Be sure the students know the English name for each of the objects that you show. Cover or hide the objects, then ask students to write down all of the objects they remember. Once that is done, have students share what they remember and compare who remembered the most number of things. Whenever the students share, though, they must use the modal "should:" There should be a pencil on the tray," etc. If a student names an object that wasn't on the tray, then the negative can be used: There shouldn't be a pencil on the tray."

Finish the Lesson

1 The teacher writes an example statement and question on the board using "should." Students then try to label the different parts of the sentence and question using terms from the grammar chart.

Introduce the Writing

1 If possible, bring in pictures or actual examples of miniature things. Doll furniture, dogs, and horses are some possible things to use. Explain that these are very small versions of normally larger items, and that bonsai is a miniature version of a tree. Ask to see if any students know about the art of bonsai.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Read and write ✓ or ✗.

1 I pack many books in my backpack.
2 Tom wears science every day.
3 Lewis doesn't like to keys coats in the winter.
4 Megan is studying for her gym.
5 The keys are in the car.
6 We have a math test today.
7 Roy plays soccer in gym class.

B Read and write. Use the words below.

All set | What about | I'm | Okay

1 _____ almost ready.
2 _____, dear.
3 _____ these?
4 _____ for school?

C Read and write should or shouldn't.

1 You _____ put trash in trash cans.
2 We _____ always recycle paper and plastic.
3 Henry _____ brush his teeth after a meal.
4 Sam _____ slam the door loudly.
5 I _____ study for my test tomorrow.

50 Unit 6 Ready for School?

Practice the Writing

1 Have students read the writing passage a few sentences at a time. Check often to assess student understanding.

2 Ask students to make an ordered list of the steps needed to make a bonsai tree. Compare and check students' answers. Are the directions in the writing passage clear?

3 Read the Writing Tips and note if the guidelines are followed in the writing passage. How are order words helpful?

Finish the Lesson

1 Explain and assign Exercise A and B. After students are finished, check their work carefully and allow some students to read their paragraphs. Peer editing can also be done at this time.

Introduce the Activities

1 Write several vocabulary items on the board backwards and see if students can guess what you're doing. Then see if they can "read" the word backwards.

2 Have student volunteers come to the front of the classroom and purposely do something incorrectly (but not breaking any of the classroom rules). Another student must correct him by saying "S/he should _____." or "S/he shouldn't _____." and name the correct activity. Do this several times for practice.

Practice the Activities

1 Explain and assign Exercise A and B. When students have finished and had their responses checked, have students read their sentences aloud for practice. Do the same with Exercise C.

2 Let students read the paragraph in Exercise D ahead of time. Then have students close their books and listen to the CD as it is played. Students can then open their books, write any answers they remember, and listen to the CD again, this time with their books open. By the end of the second time, students should be able to finish the paragraph. Then ask a student to read the paragraph aloud, or have each student read a sentence of the paragraph.

3 Finally, assign Exercise E and ask students to match the sentence and the picture. Review any words that students are not familiar with.

Additional Practice

1 The workbook pages 33-38 correspond with Unit 6 of the Class Book. These pages can be assigned individually as the Class Book is completed, or as a unit to be completed before the next unit is started. Also, many games and activities are listed in the introductory section of the Teacher's Book; some of these activities can be used for further practice and drill.

Finish the Lesson

1 To end the lesson, have students rewrite the class rules using "should" or "shouldn't" for each rule. For example, "Raise your hand and wait to be called on," could be "Students should raise their hand and wait to be called on." If the rules are posted like this in the classroom, it can be an excellent way for students to review the Unit 6 grammar point.

7 The Alligator Scare

Conversation and Vocabulary

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of there was and there were.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using the new vocabulary and the grammar point for the unit.

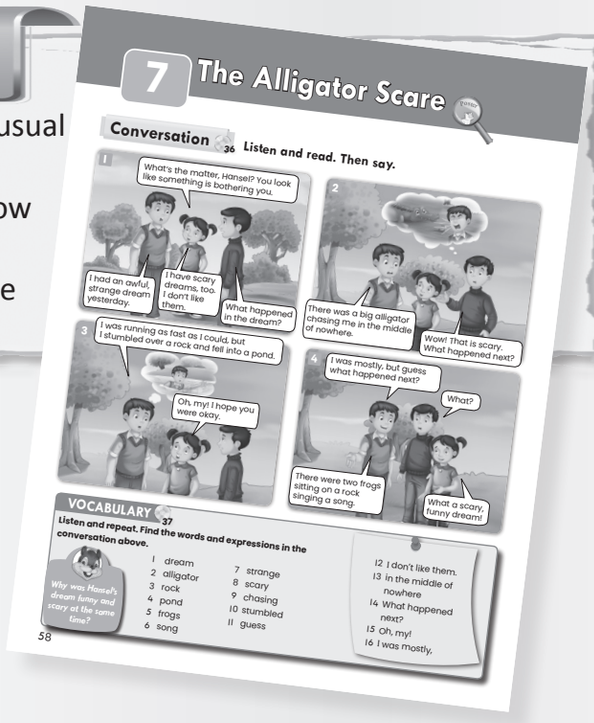
Materials needed: flashcards of the words as well as teacher-made ones of the phrases, Class Book, a typed-out version of the conversation with spaces between each person's lines, cards with numbers 1-16, flip book, CD and CD player.

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Ask students if they remember a strange or unusual dream they have had. Do any of the students remember any dreams they had last night? Allow students to share some about their dreams. Mention that in the conversation, Hansel will be talking about one of his dreams.



7 The Alligator Scare

Conversation 36 Listen and read. Then say.

1 What's the matter, Hansel? You look like something is bothering you.
I had an awful, strange dream yesterday.
I have scary dreams, too. I don't like them.
What happened in the dream?

2 There was a big alligator chasing me in the middle of nowhere.
Wow! That is scary. What happened next?

3 I was running as fast as I could, but I stumbled over a rock and fell into a pond.
Oh, my! I hope you were okay.

4 I was mostly, but guess what happened next?
What?
There were two frogs sitting on a rock singing a song.
What a scary, funny dream!

VOCABULARY 37
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.

Why was Hansel's dream funny and scary at the same time?

1 dream
2 alligator
3 rock
4 pond
5 frogs
6 song
7 strange
8 scary
9 chasing
10 stumbled
11 guess
12 I don't like them.
13 in the middle of nowhere
14 What happened next?
15 Oh, my!
16 I was mostly.

Introduce the Conversation

1 As a routine for good reading, have students notice the title of the unit, notice which characters are in the conversation, and look at the pictures. With this information, see if students can make predictions about what the conversation is about. Was Hansel's dream a bad one or a good one? A fun variation is to write three students' predictions and their names on the board. At the end of reading the conversation see who was correct.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin the CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played again on the CD. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read. Ask basic questions about the conversation to see if students understand what they read.

2 Choose three students to read the conversation aloud for the class. It is a good idea to have a classroom system to insure that each child gets practice reading the conversation. Each child could have a number, and you could go in numerical order for each conversation. After the reading, ask students a question about what is happening in each numbered box. Students who struggle excessively with reading aloud could be assigned a character with a smaller part. After finishing the conversation, ask some comprehension questions. Some question ideas are as follows:

a (Box 1) What is bothering Hansel?
b (Box 2) What was in Hansel's dream?
c (Box 3) Why didn't Hansel keep running?
d (Box 4) What surprising thing happened at the end of Hansel's dream?

3 Have students divide into groups. Have two students in each group read the conversation. The remaining students in the group each tell one thing that happened in the conversation. If time allows, let students take turns reading so everyone has an opportunity to read.

4 In addition, three students could be asked to come up and act out the conversation.

Games and Activities

1 Have students close their books. Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. For each box, on the flip chart, have a student describe the box and what each person had in the picture.

2 Have the students change Hansel's dream to tell about one they have had (or they can invent one). Give students some planning time and tell them their dream needs to fit into Harley's and Sarah's lines.

3 Copy the lines of conversation and cut them into strips. Give one set to every two students. Working in pairs, have the students put the conversation together.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. As an extension activity, let each student in turn say one word of the answer for the Bebo question. For example, the answer for the question for this unit could be like the following:

S1: There	S2:were	S3: scary
S4: alligators	S5: but	S6: also
S7: funny	S8: frogs	S9: at
S10: the	S11: end	S12: of
S13: the	S14: dream

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Have students clap the syllables of the vocabulary from unit 6. How many syllables does each word and phrase have? There are many words with one syllable in this unit, so the teacher could have students put the words into two groups: one-syllable words and two-syllable words.

2 How many words from the new unit—unit 10--do students recognize? Do they know their meanings? As a teacher, try to work as many of the vocabulary phrases as possible into your teaching for the day. Hearing them in context will also encourage the students to use them.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 With books open, say each of the words and phrases in order and have students repeat. Students can also try saying the words without hearing you first. You call out the number, and the students choose that number.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Give each student a flashcard and ask them to come to the front of the room. Ask students to arrange themselves so they're in a certain order. For example, have them stand with the words in alphabetical order or reverse alphabetical order; by nouns, verbs and adjectives; by the order they appear in the conversation (have a book handy for students to refer to), etc.

2 Give each student a number up to the number of words and phrases (16). Call out a number at random. The student with that number stands up, says his/her word and uses it in a sentence.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 In pairs or groups, have students quiz each other on the words. S1 gives clues about a vocabulary word or phrase. S2 or the rest of the group try to guess the word. Students must choose words that have not already been given, until the whole list has been done. Some example clues are a This word is what a cat might be doing to a mouse. It is a verb and rhymes with "racing." Answer: chasing b This is what a student might do if they don't know the answer. It has one syllable and can be a noun or a verb. Answer: guess

Reading, Grammar and Writing

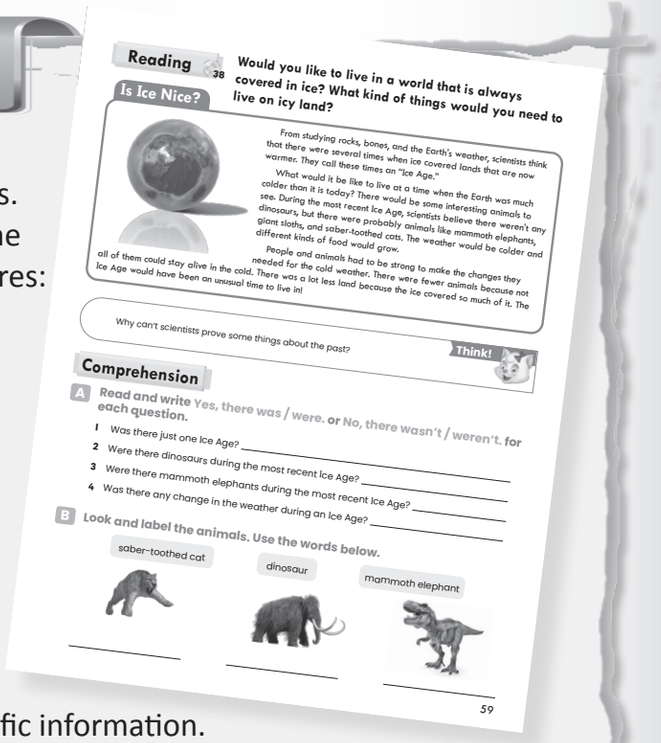
Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of there was and there were, using the grammar point in students' writing, and understanding how to format and write an observation.

Materials needed: Class Book, CD and CD player, flashcards, cards with one word each of sentences with there was and there were, pictures or YouTube of La Brea tar pits animals (or any other animals from the Ice Age), a list of common nouns that students would be able to draw, examples of different types of calendars (monthly, daily, lunar, solar, etc.), a picture or copy of the entire Mayan calendar.

Introduce the Reading

1 Show students some pictures or a previewed video of the La Brea Tar Pits or Ice Age animals. Talk about how they are different and the same as animals we see today. Some ideas for pictures:
http://www.tarpits.org/
http://images.search.yahoo.com/search/images?_adv_prop=image&fr=ush1-travel&va=Ice+Age+animals

2 Notice the picture in the reading and ask if anyone knows information about the Ice Age. If many students have been influenced by the animated movie called Ice Age, let students know that the movie can be helpful but does not necessarily use all scientific information.



Reading 38

Would you like to live in a world that is always covered in ice? What kind of things would you need to live on icy land?

Is Ice Nice?

From studying rocks, bones, and the Earth's weather, scientists think that there were several times when ice covered lands that are now warmer. They call these times an "Ice Age."

What would it be like to live at a time when the Earth was much colder than it is today? There would be some interesting animals to see. During the most recent Ice Age, scientists believe there weren't any dinosaurs, but there were probably animals like mammoth elephants, giant sloths, and saber-toothed cats. The weather would be colder and different kinds of food would grow.

People and animals had to be strong to make the changes they needed for the cold weather. There were fewer animals because not all of them could stay alive in the cold. There was a lot less land because the ice covered so much of it. The Ice Age would have been an unusual time to live in!

Why can't scientists prove some things about the past?

Think!

Comprehension

A Read and write Yes, there was / were. or No, there wasn't / weren't. for each question.

1 Was there just one Ice Age? _____
2 Were there dinosaurs during the most recent Ice Age? _____
3 Were there mammoth elephants during the most recent Ice Age? _____
4 Was there any change in the weather during an Ice Age? _____

B Look and label the animals. Use the words below.

saber-toothed cat | dinosaur | mammoth elephant

59

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books and listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. See if students can add more information now that they know about the Ice Age. Have students complete Exercise A page 5, and check their answers. If many answers are wrong, have students correct them after completing #1 in "Practice the Reading."

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Read the words in exercise B and have students repeat the words. Talk about the meanings of each of the words. Have students complete exercise B as you monitor students' answers. Show the Ice Age animal pictures again and see if students can name them (optional).

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. If students have difficulty figuring out the answer, ask students how scientist do experiments and get information (through observation and experimentation).

Introduce the Grammar

1 On the board, write the verb "to be" and its forms. Be sure students understand that "was" is past with I, he, she and it and "were" is past with you, we and they.

2 Review common vocabulary that students will encounter on page 60, such as chicken, honey, butter, juice, burger, grapes, candy, crackers, soup, cake, etc.

Grammar 39

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

"There was" and "There were"

Expletive	past tense "to be"	noun.
There	was	bread. cheese. meat.

60 Unit 7 The Alligator Scare

Practice the Grammar

1 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question, and note the question words that are used. What part of speech comes after the verb "was/were?" [a noun or adjective] Do Exercise A, practicing the patterns and vocabulary. For further practice, Use the same sentences as in Exercise A, but substitute the nouns from the other part of the exercise. For example, for the first sentence There was _____, substitute the words for the second example: brownies, apples, donuts, etc. The students then have to change the verb to match the new noun.

2 Explain and assign Exercise B, then have students read their checked sentences. Are students using "was" and "were" correctly?

3 Review the yellow Bebo box at the bottom of the page. See if students can give some examples of when to use "any" and when to use "some."

Games and Activities

1 Have 3-4 students come up to the front of the classroom. Give each student a word in a "there was/there were" sentence. The students must talk among themselves and get into the correct order. Once they are in order, students must call out their word in sequence to make a sentence.

2 Play the "What was it?" game. Show the students an object or objects, but cover them partly so only a small amount of the object(s) can be seen. Then ask students, "What was it?" or "What were they?" accordingly. When students make a guess, have them use "was" or "were." Students can also take turns being teacher.

3 An alternate activity is to have students form two or more teams. In turn, a students from each team comes to the board and begins to draw a picture of a noun. As soon as the other team knows the answer, they guess, using "was" or "were:" That was a giraffe,. or Those were giraffes. This is a noncompetitive game in which students try to get as many points as possible as a class, not as a team. Each time a correct guess is made, the class gets a point.

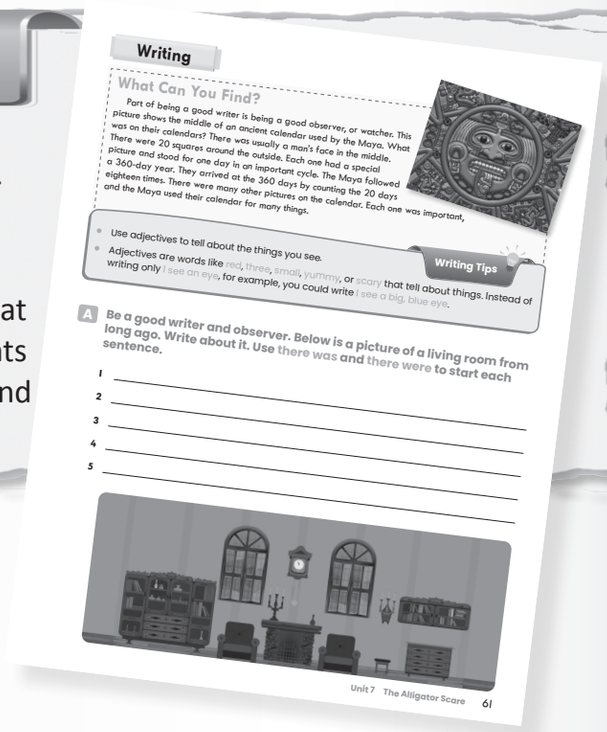
Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Explain grammar Exercise C to the students and have them complete the exercises in class or for homework. Have students read the completed and checked sentences as a dialog. Use the time of checking student answers as a time to review and reinforce the grammar point. If students need more practice, this would be a good time to assign a workbook page about the grammar point. Workbook pages 40-44 have exercises specifically about the grammar point.

Introduce the Writing

1 Show students examples of calendars, then challenge them to find a picture of a calendar in their Class Books. Wait for a short time as students look through their books, then tell them there is a calendar on the same page that they will be studying today. Then have students look at the picture with the writing passage and talk about what they think it is.



Writing

What Can You Find?

Part of being a good writer is being a good observer, or watcher. This picture shows the middle of an ancient calendar used by the Maya. What was on their calendars? There was usually a man's face in the middle. There were 20 squares around the outside. Each one had a special picture and stood for one day in an important cycle. The Maya followed a 360-day year. They arrived at the 360 days by counting the 20 days eighteen times. There were many other pictures on the calendar. Each one was important, and the Maya used their calendar for many things.

Writing Tips

- Use adjectives to tell about the things you see.
- Adjectives are words like red, three, small, yummy, or scary that tell about things. Instead of writing only I see an eye, for example, you could write I see a big, blue eye.

A Be a good writer and observer. Below is a picture of a living room from long ago. Write about it. Use there was and there were to start each sentence.

1 _____
2 _____
3 _____
4 _____
5 _____

Unit 7 The Alligator Scare 61

Practice the Writing

1 Have students read the writing passage aloud. Now ask students what they think the picture by the passage is. Show a full picture of the Mayan calendar and see if students can find the outside twenty squares or other parts to it.

2 Read the Writing Tips for Observation aloud, then ask students to read the writing passage again, this time silently. Which of the writing tips did the author use and where were they used?

3 After the reading, explain and assign Exercise A. Have students get out a piece of paper to cover the picture, then time the students as they complete Exercise A in class. After checking students' papers, allow time for the students to share their results and look at the picture to see what they might have missed.

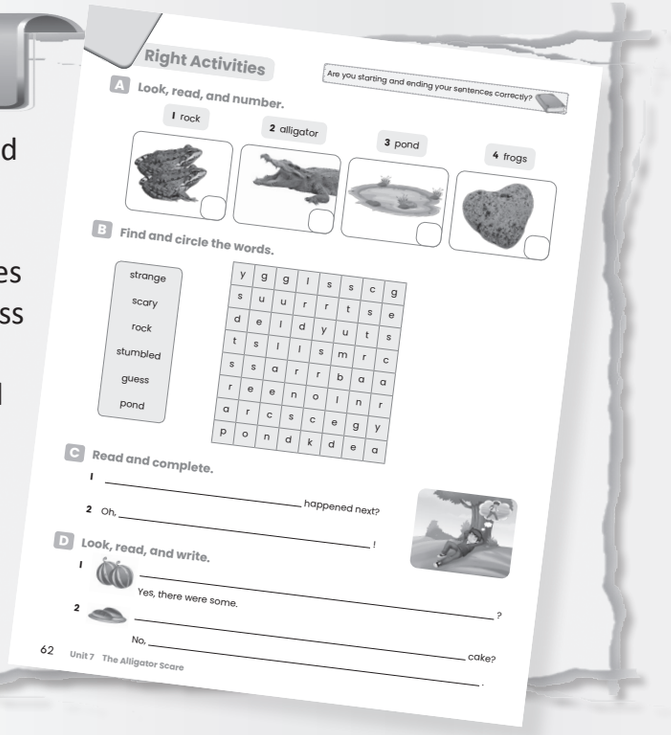
Finish the Lesson

1 A productive way to finish the lesson would be to bring several different rocks to class. Put the rocks in front of the classroom for students to look at. Give each rock a number, and have students pick a rock to write about and put the number of the rock at the top of their paper. Then ask the students to tell about the rock, using "there was" or "there were," plenty of adjectives, etc.

Introduce the Activities

1 Play the CD of the vocabulary words again, and have students repeat, pointing to each word and trying to say each word correctly. Explain and assign Exercises A, B and C on the activities pages. They can be done for homework or class work, but when students are finished, review the exercises and answers for assessment and reinforcement.

2 Review the grammar chart by writing one on the board that has some of the information but is blank in other parts. See if students can complete it together.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Look, read, and number.

1 rock 2 alligator 3 pond 4 frogs

B Find and circle the words.

strange
scary
rock stumbled
pond

C Read and complete.

1 _____

2 Oh, _____ happened next?

_____!

D Look, read, and write.

1 _____?

Yes, there were some.

2 _____

No, _____ cake?

62 Unit 7 The Alligator Scare

Practice the Activities

1 Explain Exercise C and be sure students can correctly identify the pictures before they begin the sentences. Have students read their sentences when finished.

2 Allow students to look at the picture, paragraph and sentences #1-6 for Exercise E. Then have students close their books and listen to the CD. When the CD is finished, allow students to open their books and write as many answers as they can. Finally, students can listen to the CD again with their books open and follow along with the written paragraph.

3 Explain and assign Exercise F and G, giving students the practice of reading the correct sentences when they have completed the exercises. Students could also do an oral exercise similar to Exercise F at this time. The teacher clears all items off his/her desk, and students name all the things they remember that were on the desk, using “was” and “were.”

Additional Practice

1 Right 4 Workbook pages 39-44 can be assigned page by page as the Class Book page that corresponds to the workbook page is completed, or these workbook pages can be assigned as a unit, to be done before students begin the next unit.

Finish the Lesson

To finish the lesson and also drill the vocabulary and grammar points toward mastery, divide students into groups and give each child a flashcard with a vocabulary word on it. Have one student be “it.” The other students show “it” their cards for a few seconds, then they hide the cards. “It” then tries to remember what each person had. This can be used to practice several different structures, so below are several examples of patterns the dialogs could follow. Pick one for students to use, and if desired, the students could change and use a different pattern to give them ample practice.

S1: What was in his/her hand?
S2: There was the word guess.

S1: Were there alligators in his/her hand?
S2: No, there were rocks.

S1: Were there alligators in his/her hand?
S2: No, there weren’t any alligators in his/her hand.

After students are done with each of the activities on the activity page, check their answers and review as necessary

8 I Lived in the Library

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of past tense.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using the new vocabulary and the grammar point for the unit.

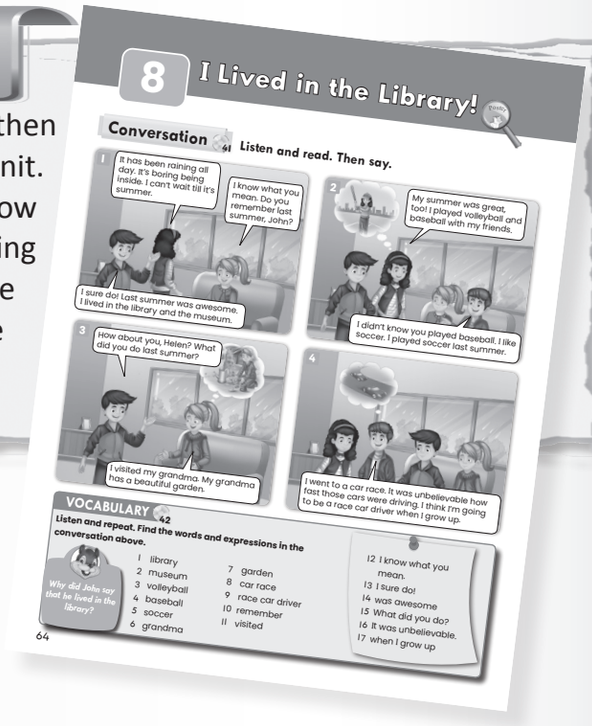
Materials needed: flashcards of the words and phrases and same-size card of the definitions for the words and phrases, Class Book, flip chart, enough hats and/or accessories for each Right character, as many dictionaries as possible for the students to use

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Write Unit 7's vocabulary words on the board, then show the students the flip chart for the same unit. Have students come up to the flip chart and show as many vocabulary words as possible by pointing to the pictures. Adjectives and verbs can also be done; for example, a student could point to the alligator in box 2 for "scary."



8 I Lived in the Library!

Conversation 41 Listen and read. Then say.

1 It has been raining all day. It's boring being inside. I can't wait till it's summer.
I know what you mean. Do you remember last summer, John?
I sure do! Last summer was awesome. I lived in the library and the museum.

2 My summer was great, too! I played volleyball and baseball with my friends.
I didn't know you played baseball. I like soccer. I played soccer last summer.

3 How about you, Helen? What did you do last summer?
I visited my grandma. My grandma has a beautiful garden.

4 I went to a car race. It was unbelievable how fast those cars were driving. I think I'm going to be a race car driver when I grow up.

VOCABULARY 42
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.

Why did John say that he lived in the library?

1 library
2 museum
3 volleyball
4 baseball
5 soccer
6 grandma
7 garden
8 car race
9 race car driver
10 remember
11 visited
12 I know what you mean.
13 I sure do!
14 was awesome
15 What did you do?
16 It was unbelievable.
17 when I grow up

64

Introduce the Conversation

1 For a fun way to introduce the conversation as well as give students time to practice their speaking skills, show the flip chart and have students make up a summary or conversation of what they think might be happening based on the pictures. After the conversation has been read, compare the students' predictions with what the conversation was actually about.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin the CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is played again on the CD. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read. Ask basic questions about the conversation to see if students understand what they read. Play the first sentence several times and have students practice the inflection.

2 Divide students into groups of five, and have each group present the conversation. This gives every student in the class an opportunity to play a part, and often the groups will spend a little more time preparing the conversation when they know other groups will be in "competition" with them. As the groups act out the conversation, it is usually simple to assess if they understand the conversation because their actions will match the words.

3 Also, as a group is performing the conversation, ask students in the other group's questions about what is happening. A good way to do this without interrupting is to have a signal, such as a hand clap, that lets students know you would like to ask a question. Then students can stop at a break in the conversation.

Games and Activities

1 Bring in several different hats or accessories, each one representing a different character. Give one accessory to each of several different students and ask them to play that character. Then change accessories so different students will play different characters.

2 Have students have a similar conversation as the Right characters, but have students substitute some of their favorite things they did last summer, then make changes accordingly.

3 Begin writing a line of the conversation on the board, but only one word at a time. See which student(s) can guess the line first.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. See if different students can come up with various questions that would make good Bebo questions, and that student can ask a classmate to answer the question.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Show the flashcards from Unit 7 and ask students to read the words and give the definitions. It's also nice to let one student be the "teacher" and show the flashcards.

Introduce Vocabulary

1 Discuss the idea of word etymology (where words come from), and give as many students as possible a dictionary. Ask each student to look up a different word and tell what the etymology is. Be sure to explain to students where to find this in the dictionary. Some students may need direction in how to use a dictionary if they're not used to using one in English. Sometimes etymologies make the word easier to remember, such as soccer that means asSOCiation football, or science that comes from scire, "to know."

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Point out pronunciation "hot spots," such as the rounded-lip /r/ sound that is peculiar to English, or some of the vowel sounds. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Play Concentration by matching the words with their definitions. Make enough sets of flashcards so each group of students has a set(keep group sizes to six or less). On the same-sized cards, write the definitions for each of the words and copy those for the class as well. Hand out one complete set (words and definitions) to each group. Students then arrange the cards, word side down, in a matrix on the table. Then students take turns turning over two cards at a time. If they get a matching word and definition, the student can keep the match. If they don't match, the student turns the cards over and the next student takes a turn. The point of the game, of course, is for students to remember where the cards are so they can get the most matches. To make this game a little harder and to give a good review, some words and definitions from other units could be included as well.

2 Using the same cards as the ones for concentration, hide various words and definitions in different places around the room. Ask students to go on a "scavenger hunt" to find all the cards, plus they must find the student who has their matching card.

Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Ask students to find the vocabulary words in the conversation and read the sentence aloud. It's also fun to play a game on vocabulary day and on the subsequent days of the week that when students use one of the words or phrases in regular conversation, they get a chip or a point. These rewards can be turned in later for a small prize or privilege—e.g., a sticker or some extra credit

Reading, Grammar and Writing

Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of past tense, especially irregular verbs, using the grammar point in students' writing, and understanding how to format and write dialog with quotations.

Materials needed: Class Book, and CD of some of Beethoven's symphonies for students to listen to briefly (optional).

Introduce the Reading

1 Ask students to give the definition of smart. Then ask if someone is smart if they get the highest mark in class. The second highest? Is it possible to measure how smart someone really is? Let students know that in the reading, they will learn about children who were very unusual for their age and were considered "super smart."

2 Ask students to notice the picture, and see if they know the musical symbol made in flowers on the lawn. Do any of the students play an instrument? Can any of them write music? Let students know the first person they will read about could play the piano well at age four and wrote songs by the age of five.

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books and listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. See if students can tell about some of their favorite parts of the story so far. Have students complete Exercise A page 5, and check their answers. If many answers are wrong, have students correct them after completing #1 in "Practice the Reading."

Practice the Reading

1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Read the word in exercise B and see if students can finish the definition. Talk about child prodigies for a short while. Does everyone have the potential to be a child prodigy? Would it be hard to "fit in?" What makes a few people able to do things at such an early age?

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. A way to encourage children to practice at home also would be to offer a small reward or extra point to any student who could bring in a written answer to this question the day that the passage will be read. This way, students will often read the passage at home in order to find the answer. Various responses are usually acceptable since it is a critical thinking question, but the answer, of course, must demonstrate good understanding of the story.

Introduce the Grammar

1 Review verbs and have students give several examples of verbs. Ask students to make a list of many of the verbs they can think of. See if students can make the regular verbs on the list into past tense.

2 Also show some of the irregular past tense verbs, and see if students can find past tense verbs in the reading passage. Which ones are regular and which ones are irregular?

Grammar 44

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

C Look and match.

1 They played soccer.

4 She cooked soup.

66 Unit 8 I Lived in the Library!

Practice the Grammar

1 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note how the sentence structure is different from the statement to the question, and note the question words that are used. Why is the action verb not in the past tense in the questions? [because the helping verb did takes the past tense].

2 Once students understand the patterns for Exercise A, do both parts in class. Have students notice the past tense verbs in the first part, and ask them why the verb is in present tense infinitive) in the second part. For enrichment, see if students can make a statement from each question in the second part. They may need help with some of the irregular verbs.

3 Explain and assign Exercise B and have students share their answers with the class. Note the different structures for positive or negative, question or statement. Do the same with Exercise C and check. Students could also do a game in which a student gives a sentence but might be giving the wrong verb tense or form on purpose. Students must then decide if the sentence is correct or not, and if it's wrong, correct it. This is a great way to check answers in a mixed ability class, because all students can provide answers without having to worry about maybe giving the wrong answer—they're supposed to! Read and discuss the Bebo box at the bottom of the page, and review the past tense irregular verb forms.

Games and Activities

1 Using a regular verb or one of the verbs from the exercises or Bebo box on page 66, say the present tense and ask for a volunteer. Have students snap their fingers several times in a rhythm, and by the time they finish, the volunteer must give the past tense of the verb. A variation would be for students to give the past tense in a sentence, but then, of course, the snaps would need to last longer.

2 Play the "What did they do?" game. Ask a student to go to the front of the classroom and perform an action. The student does the action, then asks, "What did I do?" Another student volunteers to answer, using past tense. Challenge students to do some actions that would be described with irregular past tense verbs.

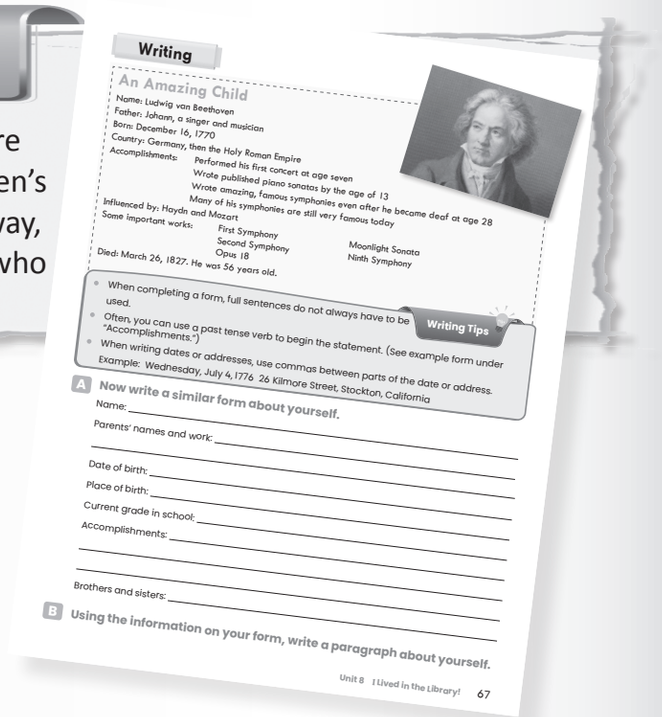
Note: Many other games and activities are given in the introduction of the Teacher's Book. Teachers are welcome to use them as additions to the units or substitute appropriate activities in place of the ones given for each unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 See if students can write some of their sentences generated in activity #2 above. This helps students to practice the writing and reading aspect of past tense verbs. Use the time of checking student answers as a time to review and reinforce the grammar point. If students need more practice, this would be a good time to assign a workbook page about the grammar point. Grammar exercises are on part of page 46 and on pages 47-50 of the workbook.

Introduce the Writing

1 Ask students to see if they recognize the picture on page 67. If possible, play a little of Beethoven's music and see if students recognize it. Either way, tell students they will learn about the person who wrote the music they just heard.



Writing

An Amazing Child

Name: Ludwig van Beethoven
Father: Johann, a singer and musician
Born: December 16, 1770
Country: Germany, then the Holy Roman Empire
Accomplishments: Performed his first concert at age seven Wrote published piano sonatas by the age of 13
Wrote amazing, famous symphonies even after he became deaf at age 28
Many of his symphonies are still very famous today
Influenced by: Haydn and Mozart
Some important works: First Symphony, Second Symphony, Opus 18, Moonlight Sonata, Ninth Symphony
Died: March 26, 1827. He was 56 years old.

Writing Tips
- When completing a form, full sentences do not always have to be used.
- Often, you can use a past tense verb to begin the statement. (See example form under "Accomplishments.")
- When writing dates or addresses, use commas between parts of the date or address. Example: Wednesday, July 4, 1776 26 Kilmore Street, Stockton, California

A Now write a similar form about yourself.
Name:
Parents' names and work:
Date of birth:
Place of birth:
Current grade in school:
Accomplishments:
Brothers and sisters:

B Using the information on your form, write a paragraph about yourself.

Unit 8 I Lived in the Library! 67

Practice the Writing

1 Have students read the writing passage aloud. Ask students to close their books, then tell as many things as they remember from the reading.

2 Read the Writing Tips for Instructions/ Filling Out Forms aloud. Tell students that when they do their own writing, they should check their writing for each of these items. If class time allows, arrange for a time during class when students can peer edit each others' writing that they will do for Exercise B on the writing page.

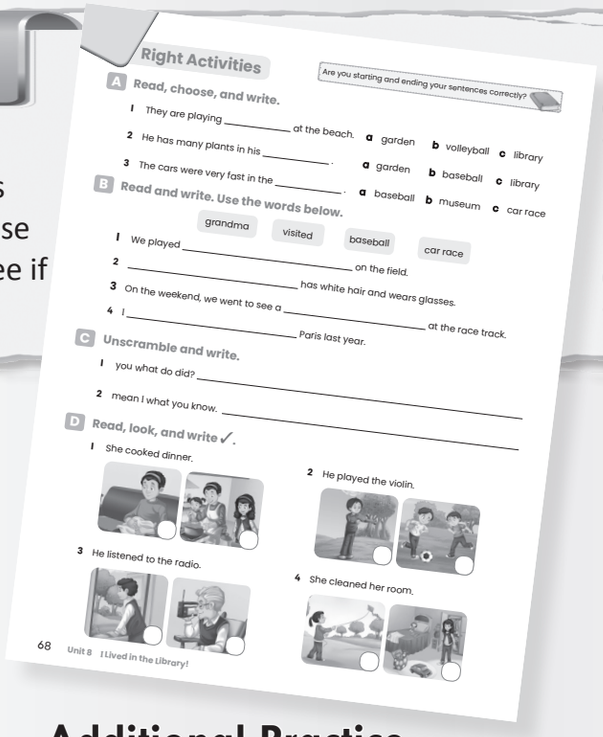
3 After the reading, explain and assign Exercise A. Students will probably enjoy talking about some of their experiences in regards to Exercise A.

Finish the Lesson

1 Explain and assign Exercise B and monitor as students complete as least some of it in class. Check Exercise A carefully before students begin writing their paragraphs; if the prewriting is good, it often leads to a good essay as well.

Introduce the Activities

1 Have students look for past tense verbs throughout their book, units 1-8. When one is found, note if it is regular or irregular. Try to use the vocabulary phrases while teaching, and see if students notice the phrases.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Read, choose, and write.

1 They are playing _____ at the beach. a garden b volleyball c library

2 He has many plants in his _____. a garden b baseball c library

3 The cars were very fast in the _____. a baseball b museum c car race

B Read and write. Use the words below.

grandma visited baseball car race

1 We played _____ on the field.

C Unscramble and write.

1 you what do did? _____

2 mean I what you know. _____

D Read, look, and write ✓.

1 She cooked dinner.

2 He played the violin.

3 He listened to the radio.

4 She cleaned her room.

68 Unit 8 I Lived in the Library!

Practice the Activities

1 Explain Exercise A, B and C, and after students have completed them and they have been checked, have students read the sentences with vocabulary items in them aloud. Next, explain Exercise D and have students complete it. See if students can also say a sentence in the past tense for boxes that were not marked.

2 Let students read the paragraph and sentences for Exercise D first. Let students know that they will only hear the CD played once this time, then they will have to choose the correct answer. Next, play the CD and have students listen with their books closed. Then allow students to open their books and choose the correct answer for each sentence. Encourage students to answer without looking back at the paragraph, but it is available to look at if students need it.

3 Explain Exercise F and G and have students complete these exercises as well. Exercise G could be extended by adding more sentence skeletons similar to the ones in the exercise. For example:

- a students/go/library
- b we/play/volleyball/at/beach
- c grandma/work/garden/yesterday
- d 0race car driver/go/to/mechanics

Additional Practice

1 Right 4 Workbook pages 45-50 can be assigned page by page as the Class Book page that corresponds to the workbook page is completed, or these workbook pages can be assigned as a unit, to be done before students begin the next unit.

Finish the Lesson

1 Once students finish writing their paragraphs about Beethoven or about themselves, let them share them in class. Other students in the class can try to find the past tense verbs.

Finish the Lesson

1 Explain grammar Exercise C to the students and have them complete the exercises in class or for homework. Have students read the completed and checked sentences as a dialog. Use the time of checking student answers as a time to review and

9 Tom Has Nothing To Do!

Conversation and Vocabulary

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of "why" questions and "because" in context.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using the new vocabulary and grammar point.

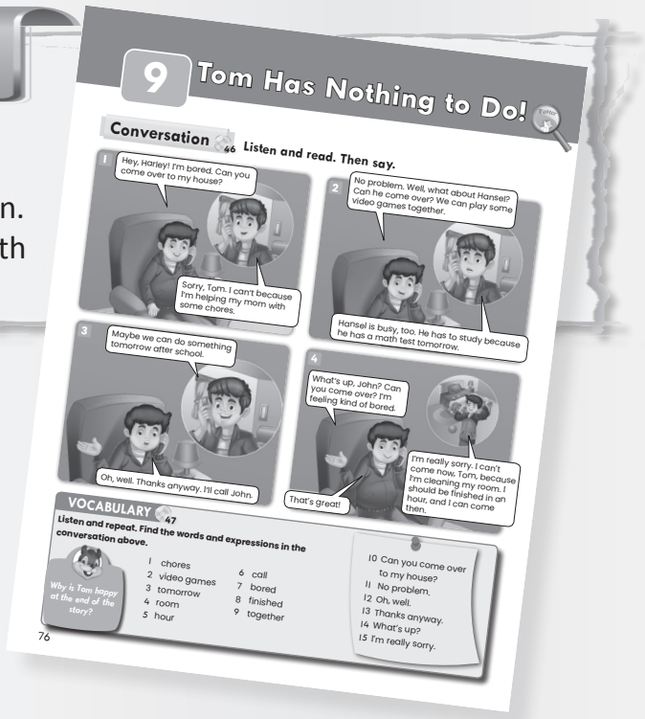
Materials needed: flashcards, student book, and CD, short clip of "Sniffles the Mouse" cartoon from YouTube (www.imdb.com/character/ch0097714/ , www.youtube.com/watch?v=AYxaH5uSuRk) or another source, about ten or fifteen cards with situations on them for #1 of "Finish the Lesson" of the grammar section

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 To review the conversation from Unit 8, play "What's My Line?" The teacher or a student volunteer gives a line from Unit 8's conversation. Then a student gives the line that follows it (with books closed, if students are able).



9 Tom Has Nothing to Do!

Conversation 46 Listen and read. Then say.

1 Hey, Harley! I'm bored. Can you come over to my house?
Sorry, Tom. I can't because I'm helping my mom with some chores.

2 No problem. Well, what about Hansel? Can he come over? We can play some video games together.
Hansel is busy, too. He has to study because he has a math test tomorrow.

3 Maybe we can do something tomorrow after school.
Oh, well. Thanks anyway. I'll call John.

4 What's up, John? Can you come over? I'm feeling kind of bored.
That's great!
I'm really sorry. I can't come now, Tom, because I'm cleaning my room. I should be finished in an hour, and I can come then.

VOCABULARY 47
Listen and repeat. Find the words and expressions in the conversation above.

Why is Tom happy at the end of the story?

1 chores
2 video games
3 tomorrow
4 room
5 hour
6 call
7 bored
8 finished
9 together

10 Can you come over to my house?
11 No problem.
12 Oh, well.
13 Thanks anyway.
14 What's up?
15 I'm really sorry.

76

Introduce the Conversation

1 Look at the title and talk about what students do if they are bored. Has anyone been in a situation recently where they had nothing to do? What did they do about it?

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. Depending on students' abilities, students can then open their books and follow along as the conversation is read. Monitor to see if students are able to point to the sentences as they are being read.

2 Choose two students to read the conversation aloud for the class. After the reading, have students close their books, and the teacher draw four boxes on the board. Ask students to write a sentence about the conversation in each box, and the class must try to put the events in order. Were any important ideas left out?

3 Have students find the vocabulary words and phrases in the conversation and underline them. Then have students have the conversation again, but substitute different words for some of the vocabulary words in the conversation. For example, they could say "washing dishes" instead of "some chores," or "soccer" instead of "video games."

Games and Activities

1 Choose some phrases or sentences from the conversation. Write them one by one on the board, and each time, ask students to use the group of words in a short dialog. For example, if the teacher writes "I'm bored," two students could be waiting for a bus and talking. After a while of waiting, one of the students says, "I'm bored!

2 Prepare a paper with several dialogs similar to the ones in the conversation; however, mix up the lines. Hand out one paper per group and have the group members put the dialogs into order.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read Bebo question with the students and let students say what they think the answer is. An alternate activity with the Bebo question is to have students answer the Bebo question in the shortest way and also in the longest way they can.

2 Talk some about the main idea. See if students can write or say the main idea of the whole conversation, and if they can write or say the main idea of each box in the conversation.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Have students talk for a few minutes about what they did last summer (or maybe what they wanted to do) and use the vocabulary words from Unit 8. The class could get a pint for each time they use a word or phrase.

Warm-up and Review

1 Write the vocabulary words on the board, but make a mistake in each one. Students must find the word, say the number of the word and the mistake. The class can then practice pronouncing the word correctly. The same could be done with a pronunciation mistake in each word.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Then have students find the words in the conversation and read the sentence. Discuss any meanings that the students are not clear about.

2 Ask different students to choose a vocabulary word or phrase and read it. Then other students must point to the correct word or phrase when they find it. Use the numbers to identify words if students cannot read a word.

Games and Activities

1 Hand out flashcards to some of the students. Read, or have students read the conversation, but when the person reading gets to a vocabulary word, the student with the flashcard stands up and says the word, then the conversation continues.

2 See if students can find any "words within words" with the vocabulary words. For example, "our" is in the word "hour." First have them look for words when the letters are kept in order, then see it they can find some by taking some of the letters in the word and scrambling them. Do any of the new words combinations help to remember the spelling of the word (e.g., to + get + her = together OR the "all" in "call" helps students remember the spelling of the second word)?

3 Play Wheel of Fortune with the vocabulary words. Students take turns choosing a word and going to the board to write lines for each letter in the word. Then students guess a letter. If the letter is in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter in the correct place. If it isn't in the word, the "teacher" puts the letter on the board. That letter counts as a minus point. After five points, the "teacher" is declared the winner and can give the answer. Then see if a student can use that word in a sentence.

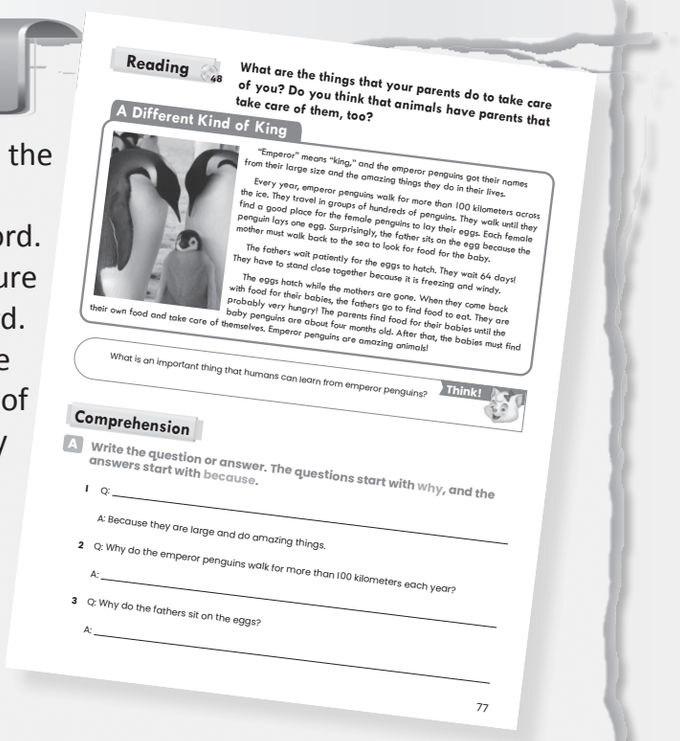
Finish the Lesson

1 Ask for student volunteers to come to the front of the room to be "teacher." The actual teacher plays the vocabulary section of the CD player (just a couple of words or so), then the student tries to pronounce the word(s) as well as possible. The class votes on how close the students are to sounding like the CD, on a scale from one to ten. The student then listens to the player again and tries to better his/her score.

Introduce the Reading

1 While students have their books closed, write the word "king" on the board and ask students to say what they think of when they hear the word. They could also be asked to draw a quick picture of what they think of when they hear the word. Then ask students to open their books to page 77 and tell them they are looking at a picture of a "king." Let them know they will find out why when they read the story.

2 Have students talk about the picture in the reading and make predictions about what the passage will be about. Do they know the name of the animal in the picture? What do they know about the animal?



Reading 48

What are the things that your parents do to take care of you? Do you think that animals have parents that take care of them, too?

A Different Kind of King

"Emperor" means "king," and the emperor penguins got their names from their large size and the amazing things they do in their lives.

Every year, emperor penguins walk for more than 100 kilometers across the ice. They travel in groups of hundreds of penguins. They walk until they find a good place for the female penguins to lay their eggs. Each female penguin lays one egg. Surprisingly, the father sits on the egg because the mother must walk back to the sea to look for food for the baby.

The fathers wait patiently for the eggs to hatch. They wait 64 days! They have to stand close together because it is freezing and windy.

The eggs hatch while the mothers are gone. When they come back with food for their babies, the fathers go to find food to eat. They are probably very hungry! The parents find food for their babies until the baby penguins are about four months old. After that, the babies must find their own food and take care of themselves. Emperor penguins are amazing animals!

What is an important thing that humans can learn from emperor penguins? Think!

Comprehension

A Write the question or answer. The questions start with why, and the answers start with because.

1 Q: _____

A: Because they are large and do amazing things.

2 Q: Why do the emperor penguins walk for more than 100 kilometers each year?

A: _____

3 Q: Why do the fathers sit on the eggs?

A: _____

77

Listen to the Reading

1 Students close their books, then listen to the reading on the CD. Then students open their books and follow along in the story as the CD is played a second time.

2 Ask the students basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Have students complete Exercise A page 5, and have them ask each other the questions.

Practice the Reading

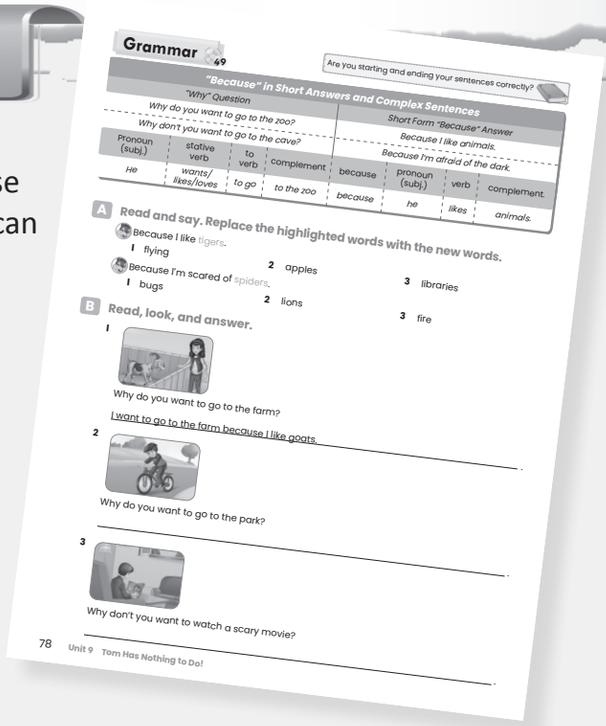
1 Ask different students to read the story aloud. Review any words the students are not familiar with or cannot read easily.

2 Read the words in exercise B and have students repeat the words. Talk about the meanings of each of the words. Have students complete exercise B as you monitor students' answers. Ask students to use each word in a sentence.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. Talk about other animals that have surprising or interesting ways of raising their young (e.g., a seahorse, where the father bears the babies, insects or animals where the newborns must care for themselves, etc.).

Introduce the Grammar



Grammar 49

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

"Because" in Short Answers and Complex Sentences

"Why" Question				Short Form "Because" Answer
Why do you want to go to the zoo?				Because I like animals.
Why don't you want to go to the cave?				Because I'm afraid of the dark.
Pronoun (subj.)	stative verb	to verb	complement	because	pronoun (subj.)	verb	complement
He	wants/ likes/loves	to go	to the zoo	because	he	likes	animals.

A Read and say. Replace the highlighted words with the new words.

Because I like tigers.
1 flying
2 apples
3 libraries

Because I'm scared of spiders.
1 bugs
2 lions
3 fire

B Read, look, and answer.

1
Why do you want to go to the farm?
I want to go to the farm because I like goats.

2
Why do you want to go to the park?

3
Why don't you want to watch a scary movie?

78 Unit 9 Tom Has Nothing to Do!

1 Play a short clip of "Sniffles the Mouse" (see above, "Materials Needed"), where the mouse asks lots of "why" questions. See if students can notice any pattern to the questions. How do many answers to "why" questions start?

2 Since this unit deals with questions as a grammar point, this is a good time to review end punctuation and inflection with questions. Write three sentences on the board and ask students to put the correct punctuation in the sentences. Then have students read the sentences with the correct inflection. Some possible sentences could be:

* the emperor penguin lives in Antarctica
* I can't believe anyone could live there
* why does the mother penguin walk to the sea

3 Write a present tense sentence on the board, such as "The sky is blue." Can students change the sentence to a why question? "Why is the sky blue?" Write the why question on the board, and have students note the structure. See if someone can give an answer.

Practice the Grammar

1 Explain and review the grammar chart for students. Note the structure of the answer as well as the question. Point out that the "because" answers are not full sentences, but in speaking they are considered acceptable ways to answer a "why" question.

2 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. For more practice, have students generate a different "why" question that could have the "because" answer for each of the numbers.

3 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, then either give students time to write the sentences down or assign the sentences for homework. The same can be done for Exercise C. Have students practice both the short answer ("Because I like goats.") and the long answer ("I want to go to the farm because I like goats.") for Exercise B. However, it is the long answer that is written down.

Games and Activities

1 Divide the class in half. On a strip of paper, half of the class writes a "why" question, and the other half writes a "because" answer. Collect the strips but keep the two groups separate. Ask students to come up one at a time. The student picks a "why" question and a "because" answer and reads them to the class. The combinations are usually amusing. Also see if students can guess what the original "because" answer was. At the end, match the questions and answers back up again and have students read them as a short dialog.

Finish the Lesson

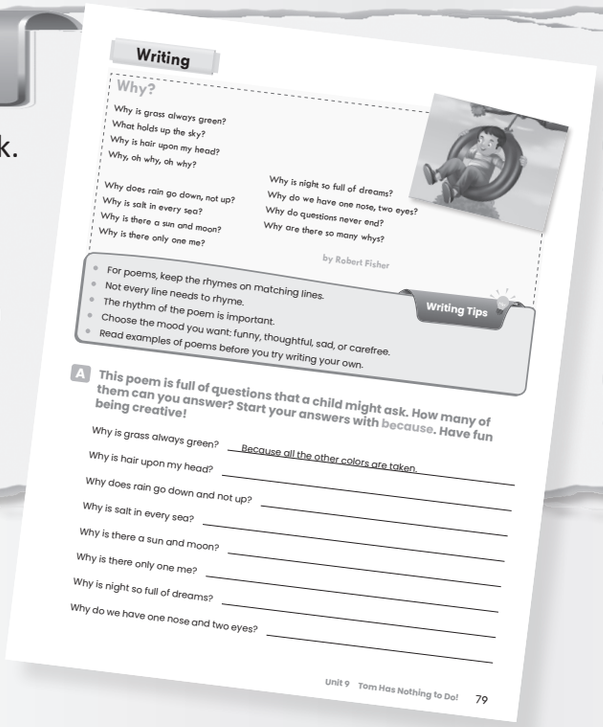
1 Hand out cards to various pairs of students. On each card should be a short description of a situation. Based on their given situation, each pair of students should generate a "why" question and a "because" answer. They can assume each time that the people talking are a child and a parent or older adult. Then ask students to model them in a dialog.

Some possible situations:

- There is a thunderstorm, and the child wants to know about the storm.
- The parent says the child cannot have another cookie.
- The parent tells the child not to go outside.
- A cat has started to follow the parent and child, who are walking along the street.
- The parent won't let the child play with a glass figurine.
- The child sees a rainbow.
- A policeman has stopped the parent who was driving the car.

Introduce the Writing

1 Talk about children and the questions they ask. Explain that "why" is an important word for a three-year-old because that is when they are trying to learn how things in the world are related to each other; for example, that when clouds come, they often bring rain. Students may have some cute stories to share about a younger sibling or cousin at this time.



Writing

Why?

Why is grass always green?
What holds up the sky?
Why is hair upon my head?
Why, oh why, oh why?

Why does rain go down, not up?
Why is salt in every sea?
Why is there a sun and moon?
Why is there only one me?

Why is night so full of dreams?
Why do we have one nose, two eyes?
Why do questions never end?
Why are there so many whys?

by Robert Fisher

Writing Tips

- For poems, keep the rhymes on matching lines.
- Not every line needs to rhyme.
- The rhythm of the poem is important.
- Choose the mood you want: funny, thoughtful, sad, or carefree.
- Read examples of poems before you try writing your own.

A This poem is full of questions that a child might ask. How many of them can you answer? Start your answers with because. Have fun being creative!

Why is grass always green? Because all the other colors are taken.
Why is hair upon my head? _____
Why does rain go down and not up? _____
Why is salt in every sea? _____
Why is there a sun and moon? _____
Why is there only one me? _____
Why is night so full of dreams? _____
Why do we have one nose and two eyes? _____

Unit 9 Tom Has Nothing to Do! 79

Finish the Lesson

1 Have students read the poem in pairs, one student is the child and one is the parent. They could also act it out, the child getting sadder as the parent gives more and more "because" answers.

2 Read the Writing Tips for Poems. Note which ones are used in the writing passage. Discuss any words that the students do not understand. Explain and assign Exercise A, but first give a few examples of creative "because" answers that a child might think of. For example, trees lose their leaves in the winter because then a misbehaving child can't hide in a tree from his/her parent(s) on a cold day when s/he isn't supposed to be out.

Then have students complete Exercise A and allow students to share their answers when they bring them back to class finished.

Finish the Lesson

1 The teacher can do a similar activity as in #1 Games and Activities in the Grammar section. Make a copy of the poems of some of the students. Cut them into strips so each "why" question and each "because" answer are on a separate sheet of paper. Give each student a strip of paper, and have them move around the room to match up with the person who has the question or answer that goes with their strip. Once they have a match, they go to one area of the room. The object of the game is to not be the last one.

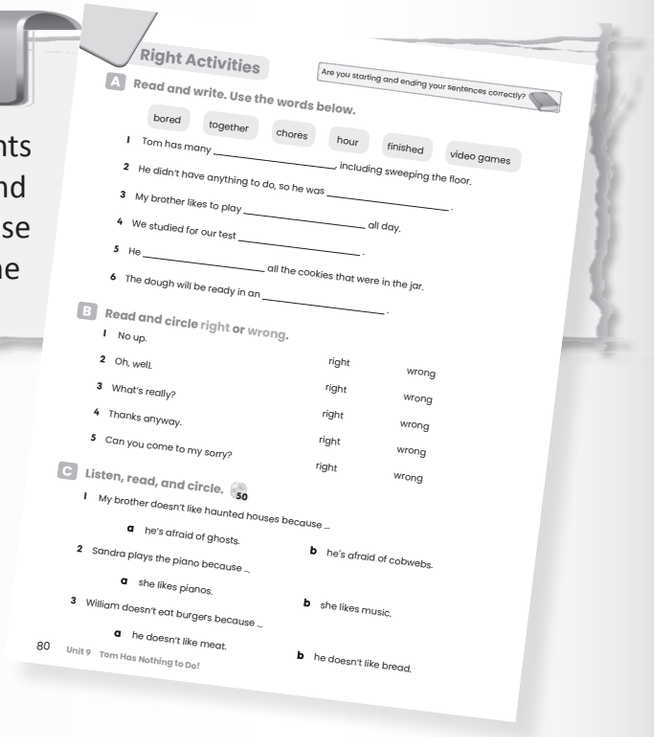
Introduce the Activities

1 Explain and assign Exercise A and B. Ask students to read the finished sentences for Exercise A and use the correct vocabulary phrases from Exercise B in sentences. Be sure students understand the vocabulary exercises.



Right Activities

Are you starting and ending your sentences correctly?

A Read and write. Use the words below.

bored | together | chores | hour | finished | video games

1 Tom has many _____, including sweeping the floor.
2 He didn't have anything to do, so he was _____.
3 My brother likes to play _____ all day.
4 We studied for our test _____.
5 He _____ all the cookies that were in the jar.
6 The dough will be ready in an _____.

B Read and circle right or wrong.

1 No up. right wrong
2 Oh, well. right wrong
3 What's really? right wrong
4 Thanks anyway. right wrong
5 Can you come to my sorry? right wrong

C Listen, read, and circle. 50

1 My brother doesn't like haunted houses because ...
a he's afraid of ghosts. b he's afraid of cobwebs.
2 Sandra plays the piano because ...
a she likes pianos. b she likes music.
3 William doesn't eat burgers because ... a he doesn't like meat. b he doesn't like bread.

80 Unit 9 Tom Has Nothing to Do!

Practice the Activities

1 Explain Exercise C and be sure that students know the name for each of the pictures. Assign Exercise C and have students make a full sentence of the "why" question, then do a short dialog once the answers are completed.

2 Let students read the questions and answers for Exercise D, then close their books. Play the CD while students listen. After the first time, let students open their books and write any answers that the students know. Then play the CD again and let students listen with their books open, answering the questions as they listen.

3 Follow the same procedure as in Exercise D. First, students read the questions, then they listen to the CD with their books closed. Next they answer the questions, and if they need to, they can listen to the CD again and follow along in the reading. This second time through they should be able to answer the questions correctly. If not, more time is allowed in the Additional Practice section.

Additional Practice

1 See if students can summarize the CD readings of Exercises D and E. Also have students practice the full sentences in Exercise D and F. If any students could not get all the answers from the CD for either listening exercise, now would be a good time to have them listen again to the CD. Also, the workbook pages can be assigned individually or as a unit to be completed before the next unit is started in the Class Book. The workbook pages that correspond with Unit 9 are pages 51-56.

Finish the Lesson

1 Ask a series of "why" questions about the conversation (some examples are below), and see if students can answer them. Students could also generate some of their own "why" questions.

10 Stella Goes Shopping

Conversation and Vocabulary

Objectives:

- Become familiar with new vocabulary words in context.
- See and use the new grammar point of the present perfect tense.
- Read, understand and summarize a basic conversation using new vocabulary and grammar point of the present perfect tense.

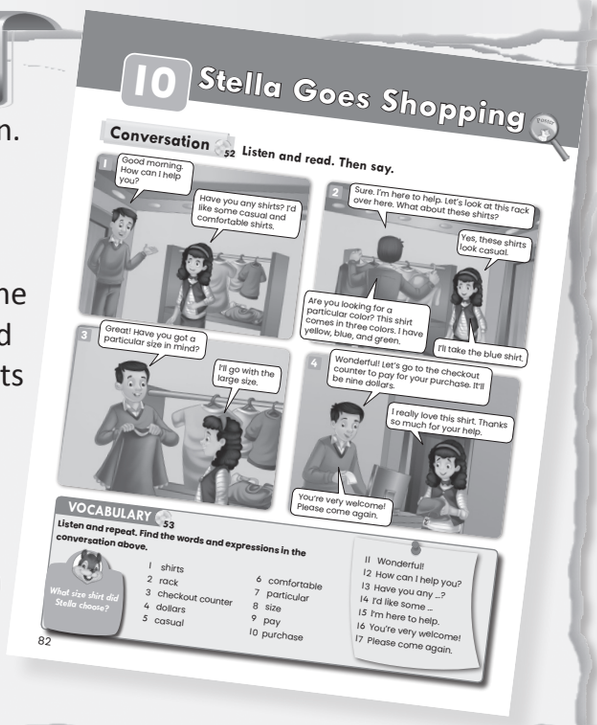
Materials needed: flashcards for Unit 3 and Unit 4, Class Book, flip book, CD and CD player, a set of cards with definitions and/or clues for each vocabulary item, prepared sentence strips with a sentence using a vocabulary word or phrase on each striper

Conversation:

Warm Up and Review

1 Bring the flip chart out with Unit 9's conversation. See if one or two students can summarize what is happening in each picture. If any student was absent the last week, it is good to use this same activity to let them know what is happening in the conversation. In the same way, students can read and define each vocabulary word for any students who might have missed them. This can also be done whenever a student is absent and needs to be caught up. It is a fun way to review, since the students get to be the "teacher," and the students who were absent feel included and can participate in class that day because they know the information.



Introduce the Conversation

1 Write the word "shopping" on the board. Ask students if they do their shopping at any particular place. Do any students need to do shopping currently? What do they need? Explain that Stella will be doing some shopping in the conversation.

Practice the Conversation

1 Begin CD. With books closed, have students listen to the conversation. As needed, play the conversation a second time and let students open their books and follow along. If students are having a difficult time with the skill of listening, reverse these activities and have students listen to the CD with their books open first, then close their books and listen a second time. When the Class Books are open, watch to see if students can follow along with the CD.

2 Divide the students into four groups. Assign each group one of the numbered boxes of the conversation, and the group paraphrases each line in that box. Then ask for two student volunteers to read the paraphrased conversation aloud. Is the meaning the same?

3 If students seem confident with the conversation, have them change what Stella wants to buy, and read it again. Note that other changes may have to be made to allow for the first change.

Games and Activities

1 Show the pictures from the conversation on the flip chart. Ask students to tell what the clerk and Stella have in each picture.

2 Have students tell about each picture on the flip chart, using the vocabulary as much as possible. Students can also act out one of the boxes of the conversation at this time, and other students guess which number box it is.

3 Set up a "model store" (if there are enough supplies, divide students into groups and set up several "stores" around the room) with some basic items to buy and some pretend money. Have students take turns being the clerk and the customer, and act out several store situations. Encourage students to use phrases from the conversation.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Bebo question and discuss it with the students. See if students can think of their own "Bebo questions" to ask about the conversation.

2 Have students write four things that happen in the conversation. Ask them to number each sentence and list the events in chronological (time) order.

Vocabulary:

Warm-up and Review

1 Hide the flashcards from Unit 9 around the room. Let students move around the room and try to find as many as they can. When one student finds one, s/he says, "Freeze!" and the students must freeze. That student then reads the card and calls on someone to give a definition. Then the search continues until all 17 (if phrases are included) cards are found. Note: It is a good idea with an activity like this to make a "map" of where the flashcards are in the classroom. Then if students have trouble finding some of them, you can give them "hotter" or "colder" clues to find the cards ("hotter" means they're getting closer, "colder" means they're getting farther).

Introduce Vocabulary

1 Have students look at each of the vocabulary words and phrases and try to sound them out or say them from recognition. Model the pronunciation as necessary. After each student reads a word, have the class repeat the word.

Practice Vocabulary

1 With books open, play the CD. Ask students to point to each vocabulary word and phrase as it is read, then repeat the word. Ask one student at a time to read the sentence from the conversation where the word is used (there may be more than one word per sentence; simply read the sentence whenever one of the vocabulary words are being said).

2 Say various different vocabulary words and phrases aloud and see if students can find the word or phrase. The teacher can do the same with definitions.

Games and Activities

1 Have students sit in a circle, and give each student a flashcard. One student is "it" and walks around the outside of the circle, just like in Duck, Duck, Goose. "It" touches each student's head in turn and calls out a vocabulary word. When a student has the card that is called when their head is touched, the student leaves his/her spot and tries to beat "it" around the circle to the empty spot. In all other ways, the rules are the same as “duck, duck, goose.” Whoever gets back to the spot first stays in the spot, and the other student is “It.”

2 Running dictation: The teacher posts around the room numbered cards of sentences with vocabulary words and phrases in them. Have students work in pairs or groups (if the class size is large, groups would be better). One student is the runner, and the other students are recorders. Each group is given a number. The runner must find the card with that number on it, then s/he moves quickly back and forth from the card to the recorders, telling them the sentence in parts so they can record it correctly. Recorders can then read their sentences aloud to check for accuracy. Punctuation and spelling must be correct.

Finish the Lesson

1 At this point, the workbook page 57 could be assigned to check for student understanding and for extra practice. Pronunciation practice can be done by playing the CD again, one word at a time. Students do the six-second drill, where they hear the vocabulary item, then they say it three times in a row to a clapping rhythm then they say, “finished!” The same thing can be done with the conversation, but stop the CD after each sentence or so.

Reading, Grammar and Writing

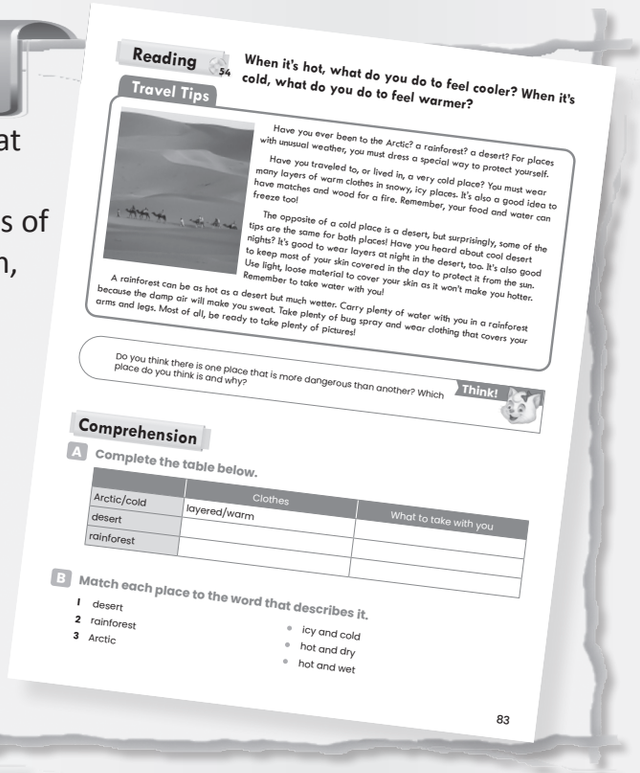
Objectives: Develop reading fluency and comprehension, exposure to the grammar point in reading passages, understanding the use and structure of present perfect tense, and developing skills on writing a personal narrative.

Materials needed: Class Book, and CD, and several sets of cards, on word on each card, that when the words in one set are put in the correct order will form a present perfect sentence, pictures of a desert, rainforest, the Arctic, etc. and some travel brochures for the same areas (latter two are optional), cards with various verbs from the verb chart one them, one form per card (see Games and Activities #1 of the Grammar section).

Introduce the Reading

1 Ask students to share about different places that they have travelled before. If possible, bring in pictures of the main climate patterns/landforms of the Earth—desert, rainforest, mountains, ocean, Arctic, etc. Show them to students and discuss what it might be like to travel to each of the places. One place for picture possibilities is landformsrus.blogspot.com

2 Students can also look at the picture included with the reading passage. What type of area is it? Note the title of the passage. What is a “tip?” See if students can predict what the article will be about.



Reading 54

When it's hot, what do you do to feel cooler? When it's cold, what do you do to feel warmer?

Travel Tips

Have you ever been to the Arctic? a rainforest? a desert? For places with unusual weather, you must dress a special way to protect yourself.

Have you traveled to, or lived in, a very cold place? You must wear many layers of warm clothes in snowy, icy places. It's also a good idea to have matches and wood for a fire. Remember, your food and water can freeze too!

The opposite of a cold place is a desert, but surprisingly, some of the tips are the same for both places! Have you heard about cool desert nights? It's good to wear layers at night in the desert, too. It's also good to keep most of your skin covered in the day to protect it from the sun. Use light, loose material to cover your skin as it won't make you hotter. Remember to take water with you!

A rainforest can be as hot as a desert but much wetter. Carry plenty of water with you in a rainforest because the damp air will make you sweat. Take plenty of bug spray and wear clothing that covers your arms and legs. Most of all, be ready to take plenty of pictures!

Do you think there is one place that is more dangerous than another? Which place do you think is and why?

Think!

Comprehension

A Complete the table below.

	Clothes
Arctic/cold	layered/warm	What to take with you desert
rainforest

B Match each place to the word that describes it.

1 desert
2 rainforest
3 Arctic

- icy and cold
- hot and dry
- hot and wet

Listen to the Reading

1 First, let students read the chart for Exercise A so they will know which information to listen for. Then play the CD while student books are closed. Students may take notes if they wish. Ask some basic comprehension questions after the first listening. Are students understanding the passage? Next, have students open their books and listen to the CD again. Afterwards, see if students can fill out most of the chart on Exercise A.

2 Ask the students more basic questions about the story to check for understanding. Have students complete Exercise A if they weren't able to do so from listening to the passage, and check their answers. This is also a good way to assess student understanding of the reading. If any of the students have been to the places mentioned in the chart and the reading passage, let them share about their experiences.

Practice the Reading

1 Read the story aloud, having different students take turns reading. Encourage students to practice their pronunciation, based on what they heard on the CD. For the longer words, show students how to break them into syllables. Practice the /vowel + r/ sounds in words like dollars, comfortable, or purchase.

2 Practice "tag team reading" to practice the flow of sentences. The teacher reads one sentence "chunk," usually a clause or one part of a compound sentence. S/he then draws out his/her voice a little to let students know there is more to come, and s/he motions for the class to finish the sentence. For example, the first sentence could be read like this:

T: Have you ever been (motions to class) …
S: (Students read) …to the Arctic? The rainforest? The desert?
For shorter sentences, read the whole sentence, then the class reads the next sentence.

3 Assign Exercise B and check. See if students can generate other words that describe weather. Some possibilities might be humid, muggy, windy, arid, breezy, dusty, damp, etc. See if students can describe the weather in their area.

Finish the Lesson

1 Read the Lolo question and discuss the answer. This would be a good time to bring in travel brochures about the places mentioned in the reading passage.

Introduce the Grammar

1 Review the use of "have" as a main verb. Talk about which items students have in their rooms at home or perhaps in their backpacks at school. Ask students to use full sentences so they are practicing the use of "have."

2 Make a chart of the three main forms of verbs—present, past, and participle—and show both regular and irregular verbs. Do students know the difference between a regular and an irregular verb? Do they notice any patterns with the irregular ones?

3 Also find the forms of "have" in the conversation. How is it used?

84 Unit 10 Stella Goes Shopping

Practice the Grammar

1 Explain and review the grammar chart with the students. Note how the sentence structure is different between the statement and the question. Show how the sentence structure is different between the two charts.

2 Be sure students know how to follow the pattern exercises, then do the patterns in Exercise A as a whole class or in groups. Have students practice changing the subject in each of the sentence examples so the verb would change (e.g., "Frank has been to many countries.")

3 For extra practice, students can change the comparative sentences to superlative ones and superlative ones to comparative.

4 Do Exercise B aloud as a class, giving students time to write down the answers for each number. Ask different students to read the finished sentence aloud. As an extension, students could take the same sentences but substitute an ✗ for a ✓ and vice versa. The same can be done for Exercise C. Have some students read their finished sentences.

Games and Activities

1 Make a "human verb chart." With masking tape or yarn, make a chart on the floor of the classroom or place in the school where there is plenty of floor space. Label three columns as present, past, and participle. Next, give each student a card with a verb form on it, and have them put themselves in the proper place on the chart. The same verb but different forms should be in the same row. The teacher may want to place some verbs on the chart ahead of time, then have students fill in the spaces.

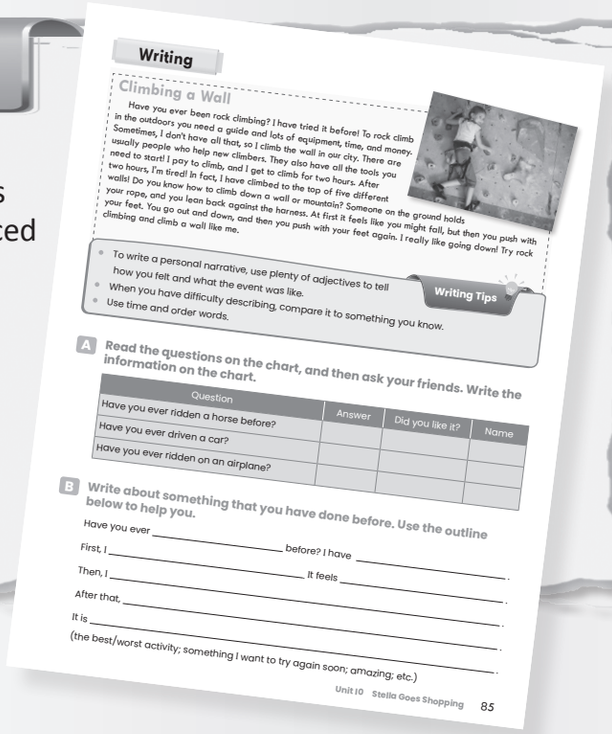
2 Take out prepared cards that are grouped into sentences. Each card should have one word from a present perfect sentence. Hand out the cards for one sentence, one to each of several students. Those students with cards come to the front of the class and put themselves in order. When they have made their sentence and you have checked it, each student reads his word aloud, in order. Repeat this activity several times, each time with a different sentence.

Finish the Lesson

Write a present perfect sentence on the board and have students show "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" about the sentence. Review grammar chart as needed. Some of the workbook pages 58-62 could be assigned at this time if desired, for further practice with the grammar point and/or for informal assessment.

Introduce the Writing

1 Ask students to read the first sentence of the writing passage and answer it. Allow students to share any experiences they have experienced or been told about rock climbing. Explain to students that this passage is a personal narrative. Its purpose is not so much to give information about rock climbing as it is to tell about someone's experience with rock climbing. See if students can tell the difference between personal narrative and autobiography.



Writing

Climbing a Wall

Have you ever been rock climbing? I have tried it before! To rock climb in the outdoors you need a guide and lots of equipment, time, and money. Sometimes, I don't have all that, so I climb the wall in our city. There are usually people who help new climbers. They also have all the tools you need to start! I pay to climb, and I get to climb for two hours. After two hours, I'm tired! In fact, I have climbed to the top of five different walls! Do you know how to climb down a wall or mountain? Someone on the ground holds your rope, and you lean back against the harness. At first it feels like you might fall, but then you push with your feet. You go out and down, and then you push with your feet again. I really like going down! Try rock climbing and climb a wall like me.

Writing Tips

- To write a personal narrative, use plenty of adjectives to tell how you felt and what the event was like.
- When you have difficulty describing, compare it to something you know.
- Use time and order words.

A Read the questions on the chart, and then ask your friends. Write the information on the chart.

Have you ever driven a car?

Unit 10 Stella Goes Shopping 85

Practice the Writing

1 Choose various students to read the writing passage aloud, a few sentences or a paragraph at a time. After reading the passage, see if students can better see why the passage is titled "Climbing a Wall." Have students note the present perfect tenses in the passage.

2 Read the Writing Tips together as a class. Which of the tips are used in the writing passage? How can the reader tell that the passage is a report of information?

3 Explain Exercise A, and give students time to ask their friends in class. When all students are finished, talk about the surveys and have students tell about what they found. Also explain Exercise B. Depending on students' abilities, either assign the chart and the writing for Exercise B for homework, or have students complete the exercise in class while the teacher monitors and offers help with wording.

Finish the Lesson

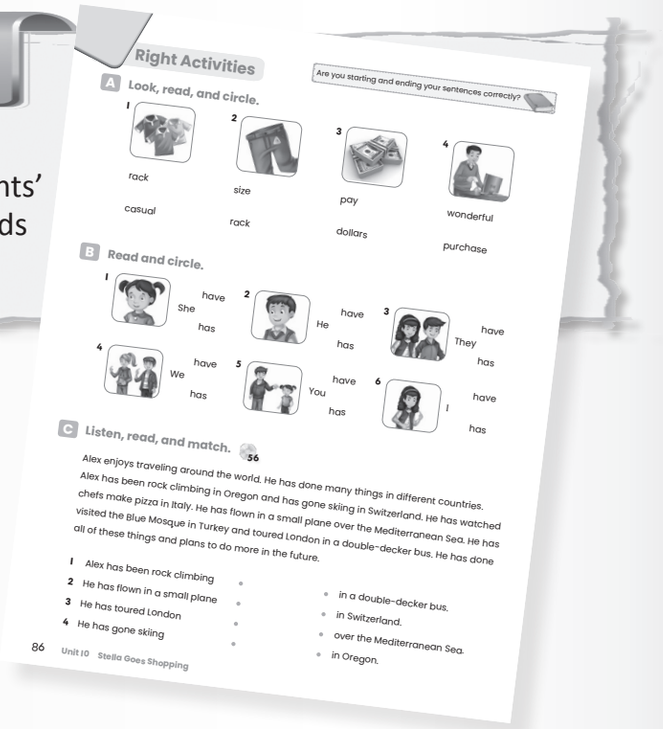
1 Allow time for students to share their writing. Give lots of positive feedback to make it an enjoyable experience for the writers. Encourage active listening for the other students by asking them to "introduce" the reader after they have heard the paragraph.

Warm-up and Review

1 This is the perfect time for students to drill and practice any vocabulary or grammar point that they do not seem confident in. The workbook pages and/or games from the introduction to the Teacher's Book could be used at this time as needed.

Introduce the Activities

1 Explain and assign Exercises A and B and have students complete them in class. Check students' answers. Ask students to use some of the words and phrases in sentences.



Right Activities

He has watched chefs make pizza in Italy. He has flown in a small plane over the Mediterranean Sea. He has visited the Blue Mosque in Turkey and toured London in a double-decker bus. He has done all of these things and plans to do more in the future.

86 Unit 10 Stella Goes Shopping

Practice the Activities

1 Explain and assign Exercise C, then have students put the words into sentences. Students could also write the sentences in their notebooks as time allows.

2 Have students read the bulleted choices under the paragraph in Exercise D (but not the paragraph). Then play the CD as students listen with closed books. After the CD is completed, students can open their books and complete the exercise. Before students try reading the passage, though, play the CD again with Class Books open and see if students can complete the exercise as they listen. For pronunciation practice, students can also listen to the CD as they follow along in the reading, then try pronouncing the passage one sentence at a time.

3 Read the sentences for Exercise E, then review the question from the grammar chart. After students write the negative forms of the sentences, have them read the sentences aloud.

4 Explain and assign Exercise F. Students must complete the word search first, then check the country that the item is found in. The one country that isn't found in the word search is the one that Louis hasn't been to. As time allows, have students find the places on a world map.

Additional Practice

1 The workbook pages that correspond with this unit are pages 57-62. These can be assigned as a whole, to be completed before students begin the next unit, or individually as the corresponding unit pages are assigned. There are also many activities and games listed in the introduction to the Teacher's Book. Many of these can be used as drills and extra practice.

Finish the Lesson

1 An enjoyable way to end the lesson is to have students come up as a class (if the class is small) or as a small group (if the class is large). Have an area for "has" and an area for "hasn't." Ask the students a number of questions about what they have done before, then have them get into groups accordingly. Some possible sentences could be:

Who has visited the ocean?
Who has seen a 4-D movie?
Who has eaten sushi?
Who has caught a frog?

Review Units Review 1-2

Objectives: Review the conversations, vocabulary and grammar from Units 1-2.

Materials needed: Class Book, pictures of students doing various activities, flip chart, flaschcards.

Conversation: Using the flip chart, see if students can first summarize what happens in each box, then see if they can have a paraphrased conversation for each box. Do this activity with the Unit 1 and Unit 2 conversations.

Vocabulary: Show the Unit 1 and Unit 2 flashcards, but only one letter at a time. See if students can guess the word before you uncover too many letters. Students pronounce the words, then play a musical chairs game to practice the meanings. With student chairs in a circle or around a table (but one less chair than there are students), the teacher plays the CD of the conversation or of music while students walk around the chairs. When the teacher stops the CD, students must find a chair to sit down in. They take the flash card from the chair and hold it. The student who is left out then picks 4-5 students to give the definition of their vocabulary word and/or use it in a sentence. Play continues as time allows. The teacher can also keep track of student points if the desire is to have the game a little more competitive. All students start with 5 points. If they give a correct sentence, they add one point. If they miss having a chair or if they do not know the vocabulary word, they lose one point. The person at the end of the game with the most points is the winner.

Grammar: Unit 1—Show students pictures of young people doing various activities that they might be interested in. Ask different students to tell what they think the people will do next, using the future tense, of course. Then go through the same cards and have one student ask a question in the future—for example, "Will Greg snowboard down the hill?" S/he can then call on the other student to answer, "No, Greg won't snowboard down the hill." Unit 2—Play charades to have students act out where they are going and what they are going to do there. Ask students to prepare a charade in groups of 3-4 students. One group at a time comes up and performs part of the charade to show where they are going. Students guess, "You are going to __(place)." Next, the students act out what they are going to do while they're there. Students guess by saying, "You are going to __(verb)" or "Are you going to __?"

Review Units Review 3-4

Objectives: Review the conversations, vocabulary and grammar from Units 3-4.

Materials needed: Class Book; props such as a pretend gift or cake; pictures of grass, taller/shorter, youngest, etc. (optional); small, common objects that students could easily hold in their hands; cards with various comparative and superlative adjectives on them (see "Grammar" section for Unit 4),flashcards.

Conversation: Ask students to do a "freeze frame" for one part of the conversation. As students come up to act out the freeze frame, the rest of the class then guesses which part of the conversation they are showing. Continue until most of the conversation has been shown. The teacher could also ask students to state the main idea of each box of the conversation.

Vocabulary: Pass out the vocabulary flashcards for Units 3 and 4, one to a student. Play a series of sorting and sequential games with these cards, and alternate who has which cards. Here are some possibilities:

a. Ask students to arrange themselves in alphabetical order as quickly as possible. Then have each student hold up his/her card and call out the word.

b. Ask students to put their words into groups of nouns, adjectives and adverbs. Are there any that don't fit or that fit into two groups?

c. Have two-four students come to the front with their words and say them for the class. Then one student has to use the words in a sentence or come up with a clever way to tell how the words belong together. For example, for birthday, today and picnic, the sentence could be I want to have a picnic today for my birthday. The way the words belong together could be that they are all two-syllable words.

Grammar: Unit 3—Play the "What Do I Have?" game. First, show students a group of small objects on a tray. Be sure students know the names of each of the objects. S1 takes two objects in his/her hands, puts them behind his/her back, and asks S2, What do I have in my hands? S2 tries to guess the two objects by saying, "You have a ____ and a ____." Then students can change places and do the guessing again. Whoever guesses the most objects with the fewest number of guesses wins. This game can be played in pairs or in groups.

To practice "had," students play in groups of 5-6 people. Have students make a circle, and S1 holds a small object in his/her hand. S! throws the object to S2 in the group, and S2 quickly hides it behind his/her back. The other students in the group try to watch and see what the object is. Then one student says about S1, "S/he had ____," and names the object.

Unit 4—Play a second sorting game, but this time with comparative and superlative adjectives. Give groups of four students a grouping of four cards. One possible set of cards could be a)taller tallest, shorter, shortest, b)bigger, biggest, smaller, smallest, c)wider, widest, narrower, narrowest, d)hotter, hottest, colder, coldest, e)closer, closest, farther, farthest, f)heavier, heaviest, lighter, lightest. Students with group (a), for example, would have to find four objects ranging from tallest to shortest, then label them appropriately. The rest of the class can then check the students' work. Also see if the students holding those flashcards can use the word s/he is holding in a sentence.

Review Units Review 5-6

Objectives: Review the conversations, vocabulary and grammar from Units 5-6.

Materials needed: Class Book, flashcards, several sets of directions for the obstacle course, using prepositions of position: under, over, between, etc. (see grammar activity for Unit 5), sets of rules or guidelines for grammar activities Unit 6.

Conversation: Play "Back to Back" in pairs, where students stand with their backs to each other and S1 says a line of the conversation. S2 must recognize the line and respond with the next line. Students must speak slowly and clearly so the partner can understand. Each time, alternate who begins the conversation.

Vocabulary: Using the flashcards, the teacher holds them out in fanned-out fashion, like one would hold a handful of cards when playing a game. A student must pick three cards from all the flashcards and say them aloud for the class. That student then uses the three words in one sentence. Mix the cards up again before giving them to another student. This game can be played for quite a while, since there will probably be different combinations of cards each time.

Grammar: Unit 5—If the class has access to an outdoor area, set up an obstacle course on the playground and/or use chairs outside to make one. Have students work in groups of 3-4, and give each group a task card that uses prepositions in telling the students how to get through the obstacle course. Make each card different. For example, one group could go t*hrough the jungle gym, around the slide, on the swing, over the see-saw, and under the slide, up the ladder, and down the slide.* Another group could go over the slide, by the jungle gym, between the swing and the see-saw, and across the bars. Have students exchange cards and try the activity again.

Unit 6—Ask students to look at the class rules, and/or bring in one or more sets of rules from other places. Check to be sure students understand the rules correctly, then ask students to make the rules into "should" sentences. For example, "Don't run in the hallway," becomes "You shouldn't run in the hallway." For writing practice, see if students can write the same sentences.

Review Units Review 7-8

Objectives: Review the conversations, vocabulary and grammar from Units 3-4.

Materials needed: Class Book, ball or bean bag, a large picture with lots of detail (see grammar activity for Unit 7), flashcards.

Conversation: Have a ball or a bean bag, and allow students to have their books open if necessary. One student begins the first line of the conversation, then s/he throws the ball or bean bag to another student. That student says the next line, and the conversation continues until the end. If the teacher wants, an incentive such as an extra point could be given to students who can say the line without looking at their books.

Vocabulary: Hand out vocabulary words, one to each student and ask the students to find as many words as possible in that word. For example, in "chores" a student might find "core," "shoe," "ore," "or," "hose," "shore," etc. Call on a student to give one of their word-within-a-word at a time, while the other students try to guess the word. Students try to guess with as few clues as possible.

Grammar: Unit 7—Show students a detailed picture with many things happening, such as what one might see in "Where's Waldo?" Ask students to study the picture closely, and try to remember as much as they can. After 30 seconds or so take the picture away, and ask students to write down as many things as they can remember about the picture, using "there was" and "there were" in their sentences. After a few minutes, ask students to stop and see who was able to get the largest number of items. That student can read the sentences aloud while other students check for accuracy.

Unit 8—For practicing past tense verbs, have students work in pairs. Ask each student to write down ten sentences with the present tense, four with regular verbs and six with irregular. Then have students decide who is S1 and who is S2. S1 reads one of his/her sentences and tags S2. As soon as s/he is tagged, S2 must say the same sentence but in the past tense. Once S1 has read all ten sentences, ask students to change roles. For further practice, students could also change partners.

Review Units Review 9-10

Objectives: Review the conversations, vocabulary and grammar from Units 9-10.

Materials needed: Class Book, copies of flashcards--enough for two set per group if students work in groups of 5-6, flashcards, flip chart

Conversation: To practice the conversation, plus enunciation and pronunciation, ask students to get in pairs and stand facing each other. The two students decide their parts, then each time one student says his/her line, s/he takes a step back. Students eventually must speak clearly in order to be heard by each other. The teacher can decide if students may use their books or not. For best results, this game could be played outside or in a clear area so students can step back easily. For the Unit 9 conversation, S1 could be Tom and S2 could take turns being each of Tom's friends.

Vocabulary: Play "race track" by dividing the class into groups of five to six. Give each group two sets of flash cards and a dice. Groups place their flash cards face up in a circle. Designate a starting point on each group's circle and tell students how many times they must go around the circle in order to finish. Each student then places a marker on the designated starting point. Students in each group take turns rolling the dice and moving their markers around the circle, one card per dot on the dice. When students land on a card, they name it and tell what it means. If they do this correctly, they stay on that card. If they miss, they return their marker to where it was at the start of that turn. The first student to complete the required number of laps wins. For extra challenge, when a student lands on a card and correctly names it, s/he turns it face down so the next student to land there must name it from memory.

Grammar: Unit 9—Using the flip chart, ask two students to come to the front. Using any of the pages and boxes on the flip chart, S1 makes up a "why" question about that box. S2 then answers the question with a "because" clause. The question does not have to follow the conversation. For example, for the first box for Unit 10's conversation, S1 could say to Stella, "Why do you have so many tops?" S2 could reply, "Because I like to have one of each color." For reading and writing practice, students could play a silent game where no one can talk but they must write their questions and answers to each other.

Unit 10—Put a list of well-known places in the city or area where the school is located, and a list of activities that people in the area might do. Have students make two concentric circles and face each other, forming pairs. S1 asks S2, "Have you been to ____(place)?" or "Have you _____(verb) this week?" S2 Answers with a full sentence, then the inner circle moves one person to the right. This pattern is repeated each time a new pair is formed. At the same time, students clap in rhythm: HAVE you BEEN to ____(PLACE)? and HAVE you ____(VERB) this WEEK?, where each word in all capitals is a clap. Students must try to ask and answer without breaking the rhythm. The clapping also continues for the answer: YES, I HAVE, or NO, I HAVEN'T (claps on yes, have, no, haven't).

Review Stories

Review Stories Lesson Plans and Comprehension Questions

For each of the review stories, ask some general questions about the topic to introduce the story. Students can note the pictures and get clues about what the story might be about from the pictures and the title. Each story can be played first on the CD as students follow along in their books. Students can then read the story themselves, while the teacher checks for comprehension. For pronunciation practice, the teacher may also want to play the CD sentence by sentence and have students say the sentences immediately after the CD model. For some advanced students, another option could be listening to the CD first with books closed. In addition to the questions at the end of each story, some suggested comprehension check questions for each story follow. Each review story is specially written to incorporate the grammar points from the units the story covers, to give students practice in reading and understanding the grammar points in context. Ask students to note sentences with the units' grammar points, and notice the structure for the sentence.

Inventions of the Future

What kinds of things will be invented in the future? Many people like to talk about what will happen in the future. Will there be things that we won't use anymore? Some of the items won't actually work because they haven't been invented yet! But they will be possibilities for the future. There will be a large room like a library of the future. Do you think there will be more books or more computers in that room? There will be ideas for a future cinema at this museum too. There will even be an idea room for students. What kinds of sports do you like? What kinds of sports do you play during gym class?

Sports Day

My class is planning an exciting event! We're going to play sports all day! We are trying to raise money for a charity in our town. This charity helps people find jobs.

Our special Sports Day is going to be next Saturday. All the students in our class are asking their family and friends to sponsor them for the Sports Day. This means the sponsors are going to give us some money for each hour that we play. After we finish the day, we will take our card that shows how many hours we played to our sponsors. They will give us the money, and we are going to give all the money we get to the charity.

Sports Day is going to be twelve hours long. We are going to play soccer, basketball, and volleyball. We are going to play for two hours, and then we will take a break for half an hour. After each meal we will sit and rest for half an hour. That means we are going to play sports for a total of eight hours that day! Dear Aunt Sharon,

How are you? We're fine. School has started, and I like my teacher a lot this year. Does Amanda like her new school? Has she made a lot of new friends?

My school is going to have a sports marathon next week. We are going to play sports for eight hours in one day. We are asking people to sponsor us for each hour that we play. Then, we are going to give the money to a charity that helps the poor.

Do you want to sponsor me? Let me know and tell me how much you will give me for each hour. Then, when I'm done with the Sports Day, I'll tell you how many hours I played for so you can send me the money for the charity. I'm excited about playing sports for a whole day!

I hope we can see you soon. I miss you, and I want to play with Amanda.

With love,
Emily

Did you have soft toys when you were a baby? Maybe you had a rattle or a mobile. These kinds of toys are fun for babies. What kinds of things do you play with now? Now you can choose your toys, but when you were little, your parents got your toys. They were probably safe for you.

Did you have different colors in your room when you were a baby? Are any of those colors in your room now? Do you share a room or do you have your own room? There are probably many ways your room has changed. Ask your parents or look at old pictures of your room. Find out what you had in your room when you were a baby. Do you remember any of the things?

What My Great-grandpa Had

I have different things now than when I was a baby. I think about my grandparents. What did they have when they were children. How were their lives different?

I asked my great-grandpa about what he had when he was a child in the 1920s. He said that he didn't have electricity until he was thirteen. He lived on a farm with his family. They had chickens and goats, and they got eggs and milk from them. They planted vegetables. Sometimes they had meat. They had no TV, computers, or internet because they had not been invented yet! My great-grandpa shared a room with his four brothers. Sometimes I think it would be nice to live like my great-grandpa did, and other times I think I would miss my computer too much!

Writing Tips

- Order your writing in a certain way (such as time, space, importance, or cause/effect).
- Use exact words to get the meaning across to readers.

How is the air around you? Is it cold or hot right now?

The Earth's Atmosphere

What are the hottest and the coldest places on Earth? The places actually aren't on Earth, but they are in the Earth's atmosphere. The atmosphere is a layer of gases around the Earth. They act like a blanket to keep in some of the sun's heat and energy.

The layer of atmosphere closest to the Earth is the troposphere. This is where all the weather happens.

The next layer is the stratosphere. Planes will sometimes fly in the stratosphere because there are no clouds there, and there is less wind to push against an airplane.

The third layer is the mesosphere. It is the coldest layer. Temperatures will sometimes get lower than -100 °C.

Finally, comes the thermosphere. Surprisingly, the atmosphere goes from the coldest place to the hottest place in this layer. It can get as hot as 2,000 °C.

All parts of the Earth's atmosphere are important, so it's important to take care of it.

Think!

In what way is the atmosphere changed by pollution?

The Earth Sandwich

We just learned about the layers of the Earth's atmosphere, but what do we find if we dig deep into the Earth? We know some things about the Earth's surface, or crust, because we walk on it and dig in it, but scientists must make guesses about what the Earth is like inside. They study volcanoes, take measurements, and look at the bottom of the ocean to get ideas.

Scientists have divided the Earth into three main parts. The outer layer is the crust. It can be 35 kilometers deep in places! The mantle is next, which is the thickest layer. Strong pressure and high temperatures make some of the mantle into liquid rock. This liquid rock is the lava that comes out of a volcano when it erupts. The densest, or most tightly packed layer, is the core. It is the layer at the center of the Earth. The core is probably made of heavy metals. The inside of our planet is amazing!

Writing Tips

- Use charts and pictures to make the information clear.
- Organize the information in a clear order. For example, give information about the Earth's crust to the core.
- Have clear, well-organized paragraphs in a longer report.
- Like all non-fiction writing, have a main idea at the beginning and a clear conclusion.

A Help write a report by finishing the sentences.

Our Earth is very thick and has many layers.

The crust is the outer layer and can be up to 44 miles thick.

The middle layer is the mantle, and it is the thickest.

Finally, the core is the layer farthest into the earth, and it is very dense.

The inside of the Earth is very different than the ground we walk on!

B Label the layers of the Earth on the picture.

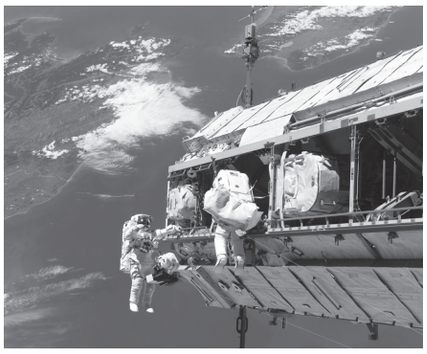
Would you like to live in space? Would living in space be different from living on Earth?

This Station Isn't for TV!



Did you know that some people live in space? Scientists want to study people living in space, so they ask astronauts to stay at space stations for a year or longer. The astronauts study about space and about the planets.

They must learn how to eat without a plate and sleep without a bed because everything floats in space! Sometimes they can go for a "walk" outside the space station, but they are actually going for a float. They must wear special suits and carry their own air. Life in space is very different from life on Earth!

There is an International Space Station that has had people in it for many years. Astronauts from the USA, Russia, Europe, and Japan have lived on this space station. It is about the same size as an American football field, and it has had over 200 people visit it. There is even a travel agency that offers trips to a space station!

Do you eat vegetables every day? What is your favorite vegetable?

A Yummy Way to Work

Do you eat vegetables? Do you think you should eat more vegetables? One way to get delicious vegetables is to start your own garden. Here are some things you should know about starting a garden.

First, you should have good soil and a sunny place. You can make your own rich soil, or maybe the soil in your garden is already good. You should loosen the soil by digging it up and turning it over to break up large bunches of dirt. You should take out the rocks and then rake the soil. If you could, plant vegetables in pots.

You shouldn't plant without planning first. Make a map of your garden. Think about things you like to eat and are healthy for you.

Once you have your garden planned, you should plant your seeds. You should water your plants regularly and check for harmful insects. Maybe when your vegetables are ready, then you can pick them and invite your friends over to eat them with you!

Gardening can teach you patience. What are some other good things you can learn from gardening?

The Bonsai Tree

Yesterday, I learned how to make a bonsai tree. First, you should get a very small tree that has only the trunk and maybe a branch or two. Second, keep it in a small pot, add good soil, and water it regularly.

As the tree starts to grow, you should only let a few branches grow. Decide on a shape for the tree and keep it in the shape that you want. Cut the branches when they get two or three leaves on them. If new branches grow outside the shape that you want, cut them. When your tree grows, you should watch it carefully. Finally, you shouldn't forget to water and care for your tree. With good care, a bonsai tree can become very beautiful. I hope you try and enjoy your bonsai like me!

Would you like to live in a world that is always covered in ice? What kind of things would you need to live on icy land?

Is Ice Nice?

From studying rocks, bones, and the Earth's weather, scientists think that there were several times when ice covered lands that are now warmer. They call these times an "Ice Age."

What would it be like to live at a time when the Earth was much colder than it is today? There would be some interesting animals to see. During the most recent Ice Age, scientists believe there weren't any dinosaurs, but there were probably animals like mammoth elephants, giant sloths, and saber-toothed cats. The weather would be colder and different kinds of food would grow.

People and animals had to be strong to make the changes they needed for the cold weather. There were fewer animals because not all of them could stay alive in the cold. There was a lot less land because the ice covered so much of it. The Ice Age would have been an unusual time to live in!

Think!

Why can't scientists prove some things about the past?

A Read and write Yes, there was / were. or No, there wasn't / weren't. for each question.

What Can You Find?

Part of being a good writer is being a good observer, or watcher. This picture shows the middle of an ancient calendar used by the Maya. What was on their calendars? There was usually a man's face in the middle. There were 20 squares around the outside. Each one had a special picture and stood for one day in an important cycle. The Maya followed a 360-day year. They arrived at the 360 days by counting the 20 days eighteen times. There were many other pictures on the calendar. Each one was important, and the Maya used their calendar for many things.

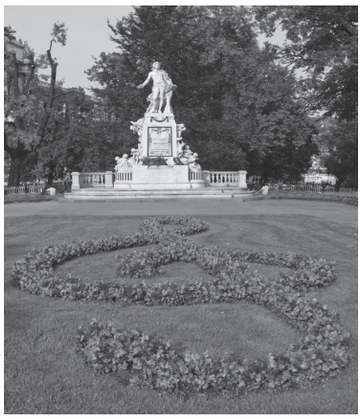
How old were you when you walked for the first time? How old were you when you first went to school? Was there anything special that you did before your classmates?

How Smart Is Smart?



You might be a smart student, but are you like other children in history? Most of us grow up doing the same things at the same times. We walked when we were about one year old, we talked when we were two, we started school when we were five, and we will complete high school when we are 18. Some children started doing things much earlier though. These people are called child prodigies. Here are some examples of smart children throughout history:

Wolfgang Mozart was born in Austria in 1756. He loved music when he was very young. He started playing the piano when he was four years old. He started writing his own songs when he was five years old.

Jay Luo was born in America in 1970. He graduated from Boise State University with honors when he was 12 years old. He was the youngest university graduate in U.S. history.

Asad Ullah Qayyam was born in Pakistan in 1998. He speaks in many different languages. When he was just seven years old, he gave speeches in 12 languages.

Think!

Do child prodigies have an easier or more difficult life than other people?

What are the things that your parents do to take care of you? Do you think that animals have parents that take care of them, too?

A Different Kind of King

"Emperor" means "king," and the emperor penguins got their names from their large size and the amazing things they do in their lives.

Every year, emperor penguins walk for more than 100 kilometers across the ice. They travel in groups of hundreds of penguins. They walk until they find a good place for the female penguins to lay their eggs. Each female penguin lays one egg. Surprisingly, the father sits on the egg because the mother must walk back to the sea to look for food for the baby.

The fathers wait patiently for the eggs to hatch. They wait 64 days! They have to stand close together because it is freezing and windy.

The eggs hatch while the mothers are gone. When they come back with food for their babies, the fathers go to find food to eat. They are probably very hungry! The parents find food for their babies until the baby penguins are about four months old. After that, the babies must find their own food and take care of themselves. Emperor penguins are amazing animals!

What is an important thing that humans can learn from emperor penguins?

When it's hot, what do you do to feel cooler? When it's cold, what do you do to feel warmer?

Travel Tips

Have you ever been to the Arctic? a rainforest? a desert? For places with unusual weather, you must dress a special way to protect yourself.

Have you traveled to, or lived in, a very cold place? You must wear many layers of warm clothes in snowy, icy places. It's also a good idea to have matches and wood for a fire. Remember, your food and water can freeze too!

The opposite of a cold place is a desert, but surprisingly, some of the tips are the same for both places! Have you heard about cool desert nights? It's good to wear layers at night in the desert, too. It's also good to keep most of your skin covered in the day to protect it from the sun. Use light, loose material to cover your skin as it won't make you hotter. Remember to take water with you!

A rainforest can be as hot as a desert but much wetter. Carry plenty of water with you in a rainforest because the damp air will make you sweat. Take plenty of bug spray and wear clothing that covers your arms and legs. Most of all, be ready to take plenty of pictures!

Think!

Do you think there is one place that is more dangerous than another? Which place do you think is and why?

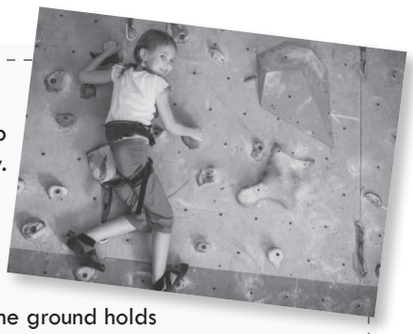
Writing

Climbing a Wall



Have you ever been rock climbing? I have tried it before! To rock climb in the outdoors you need a guide and lots of equipment, time, and money. Sometimes, I don't have all that, so I climb the wall in our city. There are usually people who help new climbers. They also have all the tools you need to start! I pay to climb, and I get to climb for two hours. After two hours, I'm tired! In fact, I have climbed to the top of five different walls! Do you know how to climb down a wall or mountain? Someone on the ground holds your rope, and you lean back against the harness. At first it feels like you might fall, but then you push with your feet. You go out and down, and then you push with your feet again. I really like going down! Try rock climbing and climb a wall like me.

There was a delicious breakfast waiting for me in the kitchen. There were eggs, toast with butter, and spicy beef sausages. After breakfast, I went to help Grandpa milk the cows and feed the chickens. There were lots of little chicks running around. Then, I helped Grandpa stack the bales of hay. We went back inside the house for dinner. There was beef and potato soup. For dessert, there were apples and grapes. There was even banana bread that my grandma had made especially for me.
